St. Helens threat to N-plant?

By BRYCE NELSON
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Because of the volcanic eruptions at Mount St. Helens, the government is re-evaluating the safety of the United States' largest nuclear power plant, which is located 53 kilometres southwest of the volcano.

"Did we do it right when we licensed the Trojan plant or should we take another look at it because of the volcano?" said C. M. Trammell, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's licensing project manager for the Trojan nuclear plant.

Trammell said in an interview he ordered the commission's geosciences division to conduct the re-evaluation of the plant two weeks ago, shortly after the May 18 eruption of the volcano. The plant is 64 km from Portland on the Oregon side of the Columbia river.

So far, Trammell said, the commission has not found sufficient safety reasons — from the standpoint of volcanic activity — for the plant to remain closed after the last week in June. It is scheduled to reopen then after an 11-week shutdown for refuelling and safety modifications.

The plant was closed April 9, more than six weeks before the volcanic eruption.

People at the Trojan site felt nothing during the earthquakes or eruption at Mount St. Helens, according to Donald Broehl, assistant vice president for generation, engineering and construction for the Portland General Electrice Co., operator of the 1130 megawatt, pressurized water reactor facility.

Broehl, expecting that the plant would reopen on schedule, said: "I don't think that mountain is capable of doing anything to hurt our plant."

Both Trammell of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and Lynn Frank, director of Oregon's Department of Energy, said in interviews Monday that the utility must demonstrate satisfactory strengthening of its structures at the plant to resist seismic (earthquake) shock before their agencies will permit the plant to reopen.

Both said that strengthening had been called for before the volcano erupted, and had nothing to do with the volcanic activity.

"We're going to review these modifications very carefully," Frank said.

Toronto rock fans riot

TORONTO (CP) — About 1,000 angry rock fans battled 75 Toronto and Ontario Provincial police for almost four hours Monday night outside Ontario Place after they were refused admission to a sold-out concert.

OPP Inspector Harry Campbell said the gates to the concert were closed at 7:30 p.m.by the rock group, Teenage Head, and singer Bob Segarini because there were already too many people inside Ontario Place's open-air auditorium for safety.

To prevent the crowd of those denied admission from getting to the auditorium, officials at the lakefront recreation park raised a drawbridge to isolate the area, which is surrounded by a moat.

When the crowd continued to try to gain admission, the scene turned ugly. Nearby Lakeshore Boulevard was closed and additional police were called in from far away as Whitby and Burlington.

Three hours after the melee began, there had been nine arrests and three OPP officers were treated for injuries at hospital.

A woman was treated at hospital for injuries, and at least four others were hurt in the crush of fans who tried to jump over the gates and swim the moat.

Toronto police on horseback moved in to defend the central gates from the chanting crowd. The mounted policemen pushed the crowd through a hail of beer bottles, stones and firecrackers.

Several times the crowd, chanting "fight, fight, fight," charged back, but the police held.

Baseball fans leaving nearby CNE stadium around 10 p.m. after a game between Toronto Blue Jays and California Angels were prevented by police from going to their cars in the Ontario Place parking lot.

Link study awarded

By JAKE BANKY

Willis, Cunliffe, Tait Co. Ltd., senior firm of a Victoria-based consortium which has already presented the government with a proposal for a floating bridge link, has been hired to do the basic design and cost analysis for the project.

The project is part of the government's $100,000 pre-feasibility study into a permanent transportation link across Georgia Strait.

"They will compile information on the safety and the cost of a floating bridge structure that will either have an underwater or above-water link for shipping," Science Minister Pat McGeer announced today.

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber said today McGeer has put the firm in an awkward position.

"They are being asked — in part — to evaluate their own concept. This is bad policy and establishes a bad precedent. McGeer should reconsider," Barber said.

On April 15, the minister met with a delegation from the consortium headed by Joe Cunliffe.

Sam Bawlf, a former Socred cabinet minister, now Victoria developer and fixed-link enthusiast, made the introductions at that meeting.

The concept called for below-surface tunnels carrying railway rapid transit, natural gas lines and hydro power lines.

At the time, McGeer said he was pleased to receive such a highly imaginative proposal and promised to put it before cabinet.

McGeer now says the government is hoping the company will be able to come up with cost figures that will be within 10 per cent of the actual cost.

Tom Pelton, head engineer for Willis, Cunliffee, Tait, said the study should be finished by June 16.

All work on the pre-feasibility studies is expected to be finished by June 30.

The route under consideration is the most southerly proposed, crossing about 16 kilometres of open water from Tsawwassen to Galiano Island.

Ferry walkouts rouse 'vigilantes'

By AL FORREST

The Victoria vigilantes group known as the Never Again committee may be back in business following the announcement B.C. Ferry workers will walk off the job on three days this month.

The walkout is part of a province-wide protest by the B.C. Government Employees' Union over the proposal to limit indexing of pension plans.

The Victoria-based semi-secret group was formed in 1978 following a wildcat strike and declared there should never again be a disruption in the ferry lifeline between Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland.

They pursued the idea of a lawsuit against the ferry union to collect damages for harm caused the Victoria economy.

All their meetings were private and they issued few statements.

They eventually shelved the lawsuit.

On Monday Transportation Minister Alex Fraser indicated he likely will not intervene in the three walkouts this month because they will be brief.

But later three former members of the Never Again committee said Victoria can not afford to stand idly by and let the ferry union damage Victoria's economy.

"The ferry service is a lifeline for us," said Ken King, past president of the Visitors Information Centre, and a key member of the 1978 Never Again committee.

"We must get action from the minister. We must get the support of the whole community. We must get the united help of all Vancouver Island MLAs because this affects us all."

King said the community may consider the idea of a lawsuit again if there is a lengthy strike.

But John Ansell, who was chamber president in 1978 and who participated in some discussions with the Never Again committee, said the lawsuit idea does not seem appropriate.

"What we should concentrate on is getting the declaration of an essential service. It is damaging to the Victoria economy to have even a hint of a ferry strike."

Ansell said the fact the walkouts will last only about four hours on June 6, 10 and 16 is not the central issue.

"Once the talk about ferry strikes begins, people fear they will get stranded and they stay away from the Island. These three walkouts will be very costly."

Former B.C. Hotels president Frank Burger, now retired, was co-ordinator of the Never Again committee in 1978.

"We have done all the research on a possible lawsuit if anyone wants to make use of the information. It is all ready to go if it proves necessary.

"The damage is immense but it is difficult to deal with this sort of strike."

Doctor Spock flails grades

MONTREAL (CP) — North American schools should stop failing students because grades are worthless measures of a child's educational ability, baby doctor Benjamin Spock says.

"Adults who don't trust children . . . think everyone has to be coerced into doing their jobs," Spock told about 1,000 school trustees, teachers and school administrators Monday. "Grades are an abomination. They mislead the parents and the child."

Spock told the Third Congress on Education, sponsored by the Canadian School Trustees' Association, that parents and teachers should encourage children who get a C grade, not scold them.

"Studies have shown that if you hold back a Grade 3 child he wouldn't do Grade 3 any better the next year because he'd be depressed and ashamed.

"But . . . those who have been encouraged to go forward will do better one or two years ahead."

Spock, author of the famous book, Baby and Child Care, noted that teachers of both former British prime minister Winston Churchill and evolutionist Charles Darwin said they were hopeless at school and would become insignificant adults.

Research indicates that if his or her teacher gets the impression a child is not a good learner, "that concept will turn out."

Job-creation plans unveiled

OTTAWA (CP) — Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy announced a wide-ranging package of job-creation measures Monday that he called an important beginning solution to problems faced by natives, women, young people and other groups experiencing high unemployment.

The new program, with a budget of about $137 million this fiscal year, is expected to generate more than 25,000 new jobs or training opportunities for those "who are continually frustrated in their yearning to participate fully in the economic life of Canada."

"Native people, even in the province of Alberta, face unemployment rates of approximately 75 per cent, and this situation is even more critical for native women," Axworthy told the Commons.

The program is also aimed at handicapped persons, who face "invisible barriers of prejudice and ignorance" and women who, after working tirelessly in the homes to raise families "are told they are not wanted in the paid labor force," he said.

Opposition spokesmen described the government's proposals as scandalously inadequate.

Fire alarm funding goes up in smoke

The provincial government spent $200,000 in lottery funds on smoke alarms for private nursing homes throughout B.C. but they don't meet the national building code standards for fire safety.

Victoria Fire Chief Eric Simmons made the disclosure today before a city council committee.

A year ago, then-Attorney-General Garde Gardom announced the smoke alarm giveaway for all intermediate and personal care facilities licensed by the provincial health ministry.

About 9,000 detectors were distributed.

"It's a certainty they don't meet the national building code," Simmons told the fire prevention committee of council.

The Victoria fire department has been using the national code standards in its inspections of city nursing homes, which started earlier this year.

The code specifices hard-wired smoke detectors, different from the battery-operated smoke alarms in that they work on a conventional AC power supply and trigger an alarm audible throughout the building, instead of alerting only the occupants of a particular bedroom.

(For other nursing home story, see Page 13.)

Highways scoops McGeer's dish

Communications Minister Pat McGeer — who touts earth station satellite receivers as a new era in electronic communications — has been scooped by a branch of his own government.

The receivers — McGeer had one erected Monday behind the B.C. legislative building as a demonstration project — have been used for six months at four remote highways ministry camps in northern B.C.

And highways ministry officials say the federal department of communications told them they didn't need licences — the same point McGeer was trying to make Monday while being interviewed beside the large dish-shaped receiver.

"The receiver is just a sophisticated antenna, and you don't need a licence for an antenna," said McGeer, who has applied for a licence as a formality.

Communications Minister Francis Fox said today the receiver installed by McGeer is not illegal because the provincial government applied for and received a federal licence to operate it.

"There seems to be a lot of confusion surrounding the question of installation of the earth satellite station on the B.C. legislature," Fox told the Commons.

There have been reports that all such stations are illegal, he said, but they are legal if a federal licence is issued.

"The B.C. government made an application for a licence some time ago," he said. "This licence was issued in due course."

The federal department last fall allowed the highways ministry to set up its receivers, said highways ministry spokesman Jess Ketchum.

"We've already got these things," Highways Minister Alex Fraser said in an interview Monday. "McGeer's six months late."

Fraser, who sits beside McGeer in the legislature, said he's never talked to the communications minister about the receivers at the highways camps.

"It's the only recreational facilities they have in some of those camps, Fraser said."

Meanwhile, says McGeer, Fox showed vision and courage when he changed his mind about a crackdown on non-commercial operators of satellite antennas.

The provincial minister of communications said Fox has come around to seeing things his way.

Saanich after police grants to save $1.3M

Saanich will start pressing the provincial government for policing grants that could save taxpayers millions of dollars a year.

Council decided Monday to join forces with the 11 other municipalities in B.C. which run their own police departments.

The push is on for a more equitable cost-sharing arrangement, Mayor Mel Couvelier said.

Cost-sharing formulas proposed by the B.C. Police Commission would save Saanich taxpayers $1.3 million in operating expenses.

This represents 25.3 per cent of the police budget, or a reduction of four mills from the yearly tax notice, Couvelier said.

Another cost-sharing formula worked out by the commission would save an estimated $6 million in capital costs, according to Couvelier.

Details of the proposed cost-sharing arrangements are contained in a two-year old task force report by the commission.

The recommendations in the report have been ignored by the provincial government, Couvelier said.

Representatives of the 12 municipal police boards met over the weekend with the commission to discuss the situation.

A press release issued after that meeting indicates police boards are fed up with bringing the matter to the attention of the government and getting no response.

Costs of policing in the municipalities with their own police forces was $43 million in 1976 and is expected to be more than $80 million in 1980.

"So far this huge cost to the property owner has not been spoken to publicly because of promises of provincial financial assistance.

"But this has not been given. We can wait no longer," the release states.

In 45 municipalities RCMP service is provided under contract and the federal government pays 28 per cent of local costs.

In B.C. municipalities with less than 5,000 population policing is provided by the RCMP acting as a provincial police force and local taxpayers don't pay any of the costs. The same applies in all unincorporated areas of the province,

Billions spent but poor still poor

OTTAWA (CP) — Billions of dollars spent on government social programs have not narrowed the gap between the rich and poor over the last 30 years, says David Ross, author of an income report for the Canadian Council on Social Development.

Women, youth and the elderly still are at the bottom of the income scale, Ross said Monday in an interview. It would cost more than $5 billion, along with a more progressive tax system, to raise an estimated three million persons above the poverty level.

In his six-month study of income redistribution, Ross states the progressive system of personal income taxes, designed to take more from the rich, has had little impact on changing the lot of the poor. And the rest of the tax system, such as sales and property taxes as well as government-run lotteries, hits harder at the poor.

Other so-called hidden tax deductions "almost without exception favor the rich."

The twenty per cent of families at the bottom of the income scale still receive about four per cent of the country's total income as they have since 1951, the study says. Most of their income is in government assistance payments such as unemployment insurance, old age pension and welfare.

And the 20 per cent of families earning more than $30,000 continue to take home about 42 per cent of the country's income.

One third of people living in Ontario, the Prairies and British Columbia are the top wealth holders. Only 11 per cent of families in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec are in the top categories.

He says 15 per cent of the population continues to live below the poverty line despite heavy government spending aimed at helping the poor. Statistics Canada's unpublished 1979 cut-off poverty level is $11,627 for a family of four living in a city larger than 500,000.

The federal government alone spends about one-third of its $60.4 billion budget on social and income security programs.

Yet government spending on such programs has nearly doubled since 1962 to 15.3 per cent of the gross national product — the value of goods and services produced. Twenty years ago, social service spending amounted to 9 per cent.

Ross offers no concrete recommendations, saying there are no easy solutions to the dilemma.

But he suggests tax exemptions and deductions be carefully reviewed and that property, sales and other taxes possibly be reduced for the poor.

Never Agains roused to act

"This trouble comes just as the tourist business was building up nicely. They always seem to do these things in the peak season."

To be stranded even for five or six hours is an experience no visitor will forget and it takes years to recover from the negative publicity.

He said the chamber will be pressing Fraser to take appropriate action to deal with the stoppages.

The ferry workers, members of the B.C. Government Employees Union, plan to walk out for four hours this Friday on the Nanaimo-Horseshoe Bay run.

A similar mid-day disruption is scheduled June 10 on both main routes across Georgia Strait. And on June 16, service out of Swartz Bay will be disrupted for about four hours.

Fraser said the corporation may adjust its schedules on those days to minimize the inconvenience to the travelling public.

Meanwhile, government services, including liquor stores, were halted Monday afternoon in Prince George while about 700 members of the B.C. Government Employees Union attended a rally to protest proposed changes to their pension plan.

Similar protests were held in Mackenzie, Vanderhoof, Fraser Lake and Fort St. John, and more are scheduled during the week in other communities.

Hatley settlement bid

Saanich and Victoria have made an offer for a negotiated settlement of their dispute with Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen and Hatley Memorial Gardens cemetery in Colwood.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers, who recently filed a petition in B.C. Supreme Court seeking to quash a crematorium project at the cemetery, said Monday the minister has given his approval to the settlement.

The two municipalities are waiting for a response from the owners of the cemetery.

Terms of the settlement have not been revealed and Hatley Gardens manager Ron Reynolds would not comment Monday on the statement.

Tillicum meeting

The Capital Regional District board will hold a special meeting at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday to consider Saanich's latest proposal on the controversial Tillicum shopping centre.

Board chairman Jim Campbell said today he has called the meeting at the request of Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall, Central Saanich Mayor David Hill and Colwood director Howard Drummond.

Saanich's proposal, prepared by the municipality's solicitor, Chris Nation, is that the developer, Cal Investments Ltd., explain its $30-million development plans to CRD directors during a public meeting June 16 or 17.

Any decision made at the meeting would be non-binding on Saanich and the developers.

Power line gets airing

B.C. Hydro will hold an information meeting Wednesday on the major power transmission line it plans to build through the Saanich Peninsula.

The meeting starts at the Stelly's Cross Road School at 4 p.m. and Hydro will provide information about the line and answer questions from the public.

the weather

Dull, showery weather over southern British Columbia resulted in record or near-record low maximums at many localities Monday. Meanwhile, sunny skies along the north coast produced the highest temperature for the province, 21 degrees, at Terrace. Little change is expected for the next few days.

BENEATH ITS PEERS.

Among the luxury sedans you can buy today, the Volvo GLE always seems to stand apart from the crowd. Not because of its distinguished appearance. Or because it offers almost every luxury and comfort feature one could reasonably expect.

The reason for the Volvo GLE's uniqueness is much more basic. The quality workmanship throughout. Its performance, handling and safety that are a match for almost any luxury sedan you can buy. And that you would expect to pay dearly for in another car.

But before you do, stop in at our Volvo showroom. Because there's one place you may find the Volvo GLE falls far short of the competition. The price tag. VOLVO

The lordly feds

A definitive characteristic of any federal system is the equality of status under the constitution of the two orders of government, central and provincial, in relation to each other. The question of status is a problem of attitude as well as of constitutional provision — we have been told repeatedly that the attitude of politicians and civil servants in Ottawa toward their provincial counterparts is that of a superior dealing with an inferior — if half the things that were said to us on the subject were true, we cannot help but regard this as a significant cause of conflict between governments.

The Pepin-Robarts report.

VANCOUVER — The sight of a giant disc (illegal) being hoisted onto the roof of the B.C. legislature Monday to steal TV channels from an American satellite is naturally a juicy front page story.

The idea of a provincial government purposely defying Ottawa by brandishing the type of unlawful earth station that the CRTC has vowed to wipe out is the brainchild of B.C. Science Minister Dr. Pat McGeer.

He believes that no authority, federal or otherwise, has any right to tell Canadians what they can watch but, mainly, McGeer's defiance is a protest against the attitude of the lordly feds.

As the negative vibrations heat up the closer we come to next week's crucial constitutional conference (with Ottawa leading the slanging match), the whole question of the superiority complex of Liberal ministers and their mandarin messengers becomes of prime importance.

Dr. McGeer, a one-time leader of the B.C. Liberal party, was turned into a passionate (almost chauvinistic) regionalist by the attitude of the Ottawa Liberals toward the now-dead provincial wing.

The issue of the illegal satellite station is not important (the Yankee-pay TV networks from whom the signals are being stolen will scramble the signals in a few months anyway). But McGeer was enraged by the manner of federal Communications Minister Francis Fox in a Victoria meeting last week.

Superior attitudes toward inferiors. That says it all. Alberta's rage toward Energy Minister Marc Lalonde is based almost as much on the behavior of Lalonde — whose hauteur and heavensent Ottawa mien is equal nearly to that of Himself — as on his tough stance.

One senior B.C. civil servant, who has been flying back and forth to Ottawa for five years, says that in all the haggling in the shared-policies field, disputes over managements and systems often are not as important as the attitudes of the federal officials involved.

"We are regarded as second class citizens — all of us who represent the provinces," he says.

At the recent punch-up here between Prime Minister Trudeau and the Bill Bennett cabinet over a Japanese coal deal, one of the non-elected officials travelling with Trudeau called B.C. officials in the discussions a bunch of "dinks".

When this was reported and the offender was tracked down, he blithely confessed to the description.

Part of the problem with the deities from on high is the leftover mentality from an Ottawa mandarinate that still recalls its glory days, when Ottawa had a premium on all the brains and talent in the government field.

"It's almost a cutltural matter," complains a provincial deputy minister. "Those officials in central Canada clearly believe in a unitary state— as if this were France or Britain.

"It all goes back to wartime and C.D. Howe — the belief that Ottawa ran everything and should."

Over the past decade, as the age of provincial premiers took a massive generational leap backwards from the era of Joey Smallwood and W.A.C. Bennett to a new managerial class in their early 40s, they naturally attracted a new breed of younger academics and professional government advisers who could choose their own lifestyles without being sucked into the dreary Ottawa maw.

With Trudeau now older than all the premiers, it is the Ottawa negotiators who are looking a little long in the tooth — and inflexible.

It is ironic that Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin, the author with John Robarts of the attitude problem, has already irritated Western Canada with his superior style.

Tourist railway scuttled

KELOWNA (CP) — The provincial government has scuttled plans for reviving a historic railway in the Okanagan Valley.

The provincial secretary's ministry has turned down a request by the Kettle Valley Railway Heritage Society for funding from the B.C. Heritage Trust to upgrade a 90-kilometre section of the railway between McCulloch and Penticton as a tourist attraction.

A provincially-funded $42,000 study said a capital expenditure of between $8 million and $9 million would be needed to make the railway operational. It forecast an annual operating cost of $730,000, based on a 120-day annual season.

Bison case verdict to rancher

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — A rancher embroiled in a dispute with the B.C. government over ownership of a herd of bison was found not guilty Monday of shooting a bison without a permit.

Provincial court Judge Glen Skelhorne said the B.C. government order in council taking possession of the herd owned by Lynn Ross was appropriation without compensation.

The charge arose from a January, 1979, incident when Ross arrived in this northeastern B.C. community with a dead bison in the back of his truck. Ross said he shot the animal on his ranch near Pink Mountain, 160 kilometres north of here.

Reneging on rescue vows, Island agent accuses PM

Volunteer rescue agent Dr. Robert Somerville of Campbell River has written Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau accusing the federal government of reneging on its promises to upgrade search and rescue facilities on the West Coast.

"You appear to have reneged on our deal. You promised through your secretary during your last trip to Campbell River to have a 68-foot search and rescue craft constructed for Campbell River in return for my promise not to use electronic means with high amplification to ask very pointed and politically embarrassing questions during your speech," Somerville said.

"I am advised that the vessel in question is not even under construction."

Capt. Jack Ickringill, regional manager for search and rescue in Vancouver, confirmed work on the vessel is not under way.

He said, however, a 21-metre (69-foot) vessel is being built by Breton Industries in Nova Scotia and will be delivered and stationed at Prince Rupert in early fall. He expects the Campbell River vessel to be delivered six months after that date.

Ickringill said he does not know which shipyard will be given the contract for the Campbell River vessel.

In his letter, Somerville also takes the prime minister to task for not having a fifth helicopter supplied to CFB Comox as promised. He said the helicopters on the base have not been placed on a 15-minute standby 24 hours per day.

A Canadian armed forces spokesman said the helicopter crews are on a 30-minute standby from 2 to 10 p.m. Fridays through to Tuesdays during the summer.

He said, however, a crew can be mustered in five minutes in an emergency.

"The additional vessels needed so urgently for the West Coast remain on the pieces of paper in the form of recommendations. It seems the Treasury has no plans to implement them," Somerville said.

Nannies want better deal

VANCOUVER (CP) — Nannies and mothers' helpers have formed a group in British Columbia to fight for more pay, less work and better security and benefits.

Susan Hill, an organizer for the B.C. Domestics' Association, says the group is lobbying B.C. Labor Minister Jack Heinrich to be included in pending labor amendments for farm workers.

Ms. Hill, 21, says that while she receives most of the benefits the association is seeking — including sick pay, statutory holidays, a two-week annual vacation and virtually no babysitting in the evenings — her situation is not the general rule.

"There are girls, they don't get any of the benefits," she says.

Like Ms. Hill, most of the estimated 3,000 nannies in the Lower Mainland are young women looking for a cheap way to travel. They're brought to Canada by employment agencies, mainly from England, New Zealand, Australia, Jamaica and the Phillipines. They are given temporary visas and one-year work permits and their working conditions and pay are set by the employer and Employment and Immigration Canada.

These arrangements, however, carry little legal weight.

"We want contracts," Ms. Hill says. "Some agencies have given out contracts but they are not signed by the employer and the employee. They are not legally binding."

The main problem, however, is money. The immigration department sets a minimum wage of $350 a month. Nannies also receive room and board, valued at about $150 a month and considered a taxable benefit.

The association wants a minimum of $3 an hour, the same wage received by their sister organization in Ontario. Based on a 10-hour day, this works out to about $600 a month. Ms. Hill says room and board be deducted from this, making the nannies' proposed minimum wage $450 a month.

However, Jan Sherwood of Classic Personnel, one of the oldest agencies handling nannies, says the present pay is fair when benefits such as room and board and frequent use of the family car and holiday resorts are taken into consideration.

Broadcasters win round one

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ten area radio and television broadcasting firms charged with violating the federal Combines Act won the first round Monday in B.C. Supreme Court when a portion of the Crown's case was ruled inadmissible.

Justice H.C. McKay said the Crown could not introduce documents seized by combines investigators before the alleged agreement among the stations became an offence.

Charged with conspiring in 1976 and 1977 to unduly lessen competition in the sale of broadcast time are B.C. Television Broadcasting System Ltd., Western Approaches Ltd., Radio NW Ltd., Q Broadcasting Ltd., CKWX Radio Ltd., Jim Pattison Industries Ltd., Great Pacific Broadcasting Ltd., Chum Western Ltd., Moffatt Communications Ltd., and City and Country Radio Ltd.

Charged also are six individuals: Kenneth Lapp, J. Edward Smith, Noel Hullah, Donald Browning, J. Bart Gibb and Allan L. Anaka.

The Crown's case centres around an allegation that the defendants were in breach of the Combines Investigation Act when they allegedly agreed to refuse to pay advertising agencies a commission for purchased broadcasting time unless they were accredited by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, said William Halprin, federal justice department lawyer.

Keep it rolling

The 'no' vote in the Quebec referendum unjammed the winch that had been holding back the launching of a new Canadian constitution.

However, as federal and provincial officials prepare to board, the new vessel may be long delayed in hitting the water if the energy producing provinces and the federal government don't come up with, at the minimum, an interim energy pricing agreement.

The issue of energy pricing looms large as a distraction to serious revisions of the British North America Act.

Even if the participants in the constitutional talks manage to exhibit a spirit of goodwill and co-operation lacking in previous first ministers' meetings, it will take months, maybe years, before a satisfactory agreement has been nailed down. An energy pricing agreement will not wait that long.

Although jurisdiction over resource control, pricing and taxation, will be a central theme to any constitutional realignment, there is no need to take short-term pricing disagreements to the bargaining table. The issue should be settled now.

Little is to be gained, for instance, if B.C. takes to the conferences suspicions that Ottawa will at any moment impose an export tax on natural gas sold to the United States. Despite the fact Victoria subsidizes domestic gas users to the tune of $100 million a year, an export price of nearly five times the provincial rate contributes over $500 million annually to provincial coffers.

The thought of sharing the bonanza with dollar-starved Ottawa is strongly opposed by Premier Bennett and Energy Minister Bob McClelland. However, federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde has dropped serious hints that the export tax on natural gas, similar to the one levied on Alberta oil, is a possibility.

Alberta has been haggling with Ottawa over a new oil price agreement for what seems like an ice age. Provincial Energy Minister Merv Leitch has categorically rejected any federal proposal that would give Alberta fewer net benefits than what was agreed to by the former Tory government. And to drive the point home to Ottawa, the provicial legislature enacted legislation giving the government the power, in effect, to turn off the oil taps.

Lalonde, for his part, has not shown any signs of fostering a co-operative spirit that might be reciprocated. First, he unilaterally revoked any agreement with Alberta on prices applied to tar sand oil. Then, he accused certain unnamed provinces of demanding economic sovereignty with political association.

There is much to be discussed at the constitutional talks. Agreement will not be easy on the mechanism for constitutional amendment, repatriation; human, language and minority rights, control of natural resources and reform of the Senate. Quebec still poses an intriguing problem with a separatist government now saying it will negotiate with Ottawa and the nine other provinces in good faith.

What the talks don't need is the infighting and suspicions that will be unavoidable if an interim agreement isn't found on energy pricing issues. The Quebec referendum is one hurdle passed; natural gas and oil pricing is the next.

Relevant messages

Solicitor-General Bob Kaplan told a dinner this weekend that "in a dehumanized kind of age, survival is a relevant message."

Indeed it is.

Kaplan went on to say, however, that zero population growth; which he described as "the dubious idea that people shouldn't raise children," was a negative idea. The implication was that zero population growth was antithetical to survival.

Perhaps the solicitor-general should realize that the two messages are not necessarily contradictory. Indeed it may be that only zero population growth — which does not mean raising no children, but rather raising only enough to keep the population at its present level — will ensure the human race's survival in the long-term.

In a world of scarce resources and constant shortages of food and drinkable water in many countries, the strict limiting of population growth may be the only way of preventing widespread death by famine, war, pestilence or disease.

If survival is a relevant message, so too is the message of population control.

Excise tax best for Canada

A character trait common to most politicians is that they are extremely sensitive about being accused of breaking their election promises.

Pierre Trudeau, for instance, always has been touchy about charges that he fibbed to Canadians during the 1974 election when he ridiculed wage and price controls, and then, a year later, implemented them.

The cause of this skittishness is a bit of a mystery. Most voters are less impressed than amazed whenever politicians actually do implement their election promises. They know that during elections, politicians behave as do bull moose in the mating season — the one crashing through the shrub, the other trampling over the facts — and that neither, therefore, can afterwards be held wholly accountable for what they did.

Still, the politicians do fret on about their image. Joe Clark, for instance, helped to do himself in by his doomed attempt to implement his promise to move our embassy to Jerusalem.

Admit deception

The war between Ottawa and Alberta, which is turning, fast, from red hot to blazing, white heat, is a handy example of why we'd all be better off if politicians could only bring themselves to admit that sure, they practised a bit of deception, of fakery, of factual skullduggery in order to get themselves into power, but then, what the hell, it's their duty to make the best possible decisions based on the information available at the moment.

Energy Minister Marc Lalonde, who is both blessed and burdened by self-esteem, is walking around these days, jaw set, teeth clenched, fingers crossed, trying to pretend that he, and on his advice, Trudeau, did not talk a vast amount of nonsense in the last election campaign.

Their particular example of nonsense involved the 18 cents a gallon excise tax of the Conservatives. This, if you listened to one of Trudeau's campaign speeches, was about to reduce the level of our economy to that of rural Afghanistan, and to destitute all Canadian widows and orphans so, Trudeau promised to wipe out the "punitive" tax.

Out of this deep black hole into which he and Trudeau hurled themselves, Lalonde now is trying to extricate himself.

Instead of an excise tax, Lalonde now allows that he may impose a "refinery gate" tax. Same thing, of course. In fact, worse, since it would jack up the cost of the most "punitive" of all energy products — heating oil.

Lalonde also allows he will keep to Trudeau's promise to hold the per-barrel increase this year to below Clark's planned $4 a barrel.

All of this is economic lunacy. Our imports of oil, today 450,000 barrels a day, will rise to at last 600,000 barrels a day by 1985. As our difficulties with the Mexicans have demonstrated, imported oil, at any price, is becoming harder and harder to find.

At the same time as we are increasing our dependency upon imported oil, we are burning up our own supplies of oil. We are doing this because we price our oil so cheaply — $13.50 a barrel compared to a world price of $35 a barrel.

True, the world price is artificial. But so is our domestic price, which we achieve by subsidizing ourselves to consume our own fast-disappearing oil. In 1979 for example, consumption of gasoline in Canada increased by four per cent, but in the U.S. decreased by seven percent.

Price alone didn't account for all of this difference. The U.S. last year experienced actual gasoline shortages. But at the pump, their prices now are almost one-third higher than ours. American widows and orphans still seem to be surviving; an increasing number, in fact, are crossing the border to fill up with cheap, Canadian gas.

The truth to this matter is self-evident. An 18 cents a gallon excise tax wouldn't have been punitive, and Trudeau when he said this either was fibbing, or was being foolish.

The tax may discourage some Canadians from guzzling gasoline. As valuable, it would add about $2 billion a year in revenue to Ottawa's exhausted treasury. In the absence of the tax, Lalonde now has to get that much more revenue out of Alberta, and so make even more certain that his contest with Peter Lougheed will resemble Star Wars.

Inhibit use

Here's where Trudeau, by taking a break from Saving Canada, can save us all a great deal of trouble. He can admit that he fibbed, faked and dipsy-doodled, and then announce that, having thought things over, an excise tax on gasoline is just what Canada needs, to inhibit wasteful consumption and to generate tax revenues.

Everyone will get mad at Trudeau of course. But he'll never have to face us in another election. In the meantime, we'd all be better off. Including Lalonde, who needs all the help he can get; and the federal treasury.

The business of politics

A sound business mind does not necessarily make a good politician. The cold realities of the balance sheet often do not complement the vagaries of human need. However, there are times when a sharp business head has its place in politics, as Victoria alderman Bob Wright displayed last Wednesday.

The scene was the Capital Regional District oval table, brick-lined boardroom, third floor, CRD's Yates Street offices.

While the two dozen or so regional directors, members of the press and audience looked on in silence, Wright took on Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier in a verbal joust over the Tillicum shopping centre issue. (Both are CRD members representing their respective communities.)

Rules suspended

Robert's and CRD chairman Jim Campbell's rules of order were suspended and the two men pursued an across-the-table dialogue which proved beyond any skeptic's doubting mind that Saanich and Victoria were capable of talking to each other.

The discussion started with a proposal by a CRD committee to settle out-of-court the controversial Tillicum issue. The CRD and Saanich are at odds over the size of the proposed mall, and regional taxpayers are footing a hefty legal bill to see the dispute resolved in the B.C. Supreme Court.

The CRD committee's recommendation was never put to a vote. Instead Couvelier offered his own compromise. In a nutshell, it amounted to Saanich offering the CRD an opportunity to "inspect" the Tillicum proposal and that Saanich council in turn would give the CRD's opinion "due" consideration. Also, the mayor proposed that two CRD officials in future be allowed to sit on Saanich's planning advisory board.

To everyone listening — with the exception of Wright — this compromise sounded like a sop, a solution that a group of kindergarten children would reject as meaningless in the case of Tillicum.

But Wright, leaning back in a black swivel chair directly across from Couvelier, wasn't listening to the words, he was reading between the lines. He was listening to the innuendo.

His response was blunt. He cut through Couvelier's tirade with the hard-nosed, but amicable style that has no doubt contributed to his rise as one of the most successful self-made entrepreneurs on southern Vancouver Island. Anyone who has wondered how he has managed to corner much of the tourist-related business in this town could have caught a glimpse of his tact last week.

Going to the heart of the matter, Wright asked: "Does that mean Saanich is willing to abide by the CRD's decision?"

When Couvelier said he would be willing to give it consideration, Wright picked up the ball and ran with all the finesse of a developer who can cut through miles of red tape to build multi-million dollar marinas.

Rather than be encumbered by what his own council might think, or even the the opinion of the regional board, he offered two things. First, Victoria would be willing to agree to submit any major shopping plaza or plaza expansion plans to the CRD and abide by the board's decision. It has always been Saanich's contention that Victoria is treated more equally by the CRD.

Second, he said the CRD would agree to pay any legal costs Saanich might incur in a damage suit launched by the Tillicum developers.

The one regional board director from the western communities who questioned Wright's authority to offer to spend other people's tax dollars and his right to dominate the meeting with his conversation with Couvelier was quickly subdued by Chairman Campbell.

Like a father who has finally seen his two eldest children drop their lifelong animosity towards each other, he peered over his glasses perched on the end of his nose and said he loved the dialogue. So much for rebellion. Besides, as Campbell pointed out, Victoria and Saanich dominate the vote on the CRD and if they decide to pay legal costs, little old Langford doesn't have a whole lot to say about it.

So as not to leave Wright dangling too far out on the olive branch, Mayor Tindall of Victoria finally piped up and said that he would call a special city council meeting to ratify this "new deal" if it meant that the court cases would be stopped.

On the edge

Couvelier was wavering. The proposal seemed to make sense. He glanced at Saanich's lawyer who was sitting in the gallery madly making notes.

Wright kept pushing. "How do you feel about it, Mel?"

No answer.

"You hold the swing vote (on your council) Mel. Tell us."

Couvelier was on the spot and knew it. He finally said that the discussion had "inspired" him and he would present it to council. Board members were on the verge of applause.

The rest, of course, is history. In the 24 hours following the meeting he managed to find more inspiration in not co-operating.

Nevertheless, it wasn't a bad day's work for Wright. He didn't make any money or acquire a new company, but that day in a politican's life should have given his business mind some sense of satisfaction.

Burst of sanity

Thank you for printing that burst of rampant sanity (Send Back the Shah) from James Cameron on May 22. The previous lack of mention of that relatively very humane course of action had given me a 200-day sense of unreality.

Considering the U.S. opinion of George III, it is very strange that that country would protect a king worse than those of the last 3,000 years. Is the Shah being protected as a personal favor to a rich old man, or as an example for all the other generalissimos who believe in the sanctity of American supply lines?

America speaks more and more for her soulless, immortal citizens, the corporations, but gets no loyalty in return. If she wants real international influence and goodwill she should support popular movements like the original American Revolution — R. Stuart, 5-1114 Rockland Avenue.

An open harbor

During the past few years, much time and money have been spent on removing inappropriate buildings from Victoria's inner harbor. Those who have been responsible for this work have shown the community what an open waterfront can mean to a city. It provides areas for relaxation, an unrestricted view both from the land and the water, and a focus on our marine heritage. It shows to our many visitors that Victoria is proud of its unique geographical and historic attributes and has tried diligently to mix the old with the new.

But, as always in creating an urban landscape, there is a delicate balance to be maintained. As we build and develop in those sensitive harbor areas, we can, if we are not careful, threaten the very atmosphere that makes Victoria famous throughout North America: the urban environment that is small in scale, a very human city where people, not buildings, are the first priority.

Concern for this balance has recently been brought into sharp focus by the controversy over the proposed convention centre. A convention centre is a good idea — but it does not need to be located on one of the most choice view waterfront lots in Victoria. From a practical viewpoint, the site is limited in expansion capabilities and is not ideally located vis-a-vis hotels. More importantly, a convention centre building there will, I believe, provide very few amenities for Victorians and will not be worthy of our waterfront. Indeed, it will detract from existing waterfront improvements by reducing the view from the land side and restricting the sight of historic vistas from the water.

If we must build on the waterfront, the buildings must be architecturally second to none, recognized across North America as a spectacular development, a profound statement about Victoria, and an echo of our caring for our urban environment.

The convention centre has not even been put to an architectural competition that would allow the best architects in Canada to test their skills, giving the community an opportunity to view alternative ideas. Those in charge of this project have not given such an opportunity to the public. This is very sad.

In the long term, the future of the inner harbor rests with the Victoria community as a whole. I hope that all residents will remain vigilant to ensure we preserve what we have and see that all developments in future enhance the unique character of our city, rather than detract from it. — Robin Blencoe, Alderman, City of Victoria.

Help the living

I have just received a pamphlet, by mail, from the Victoria Pro-Life Society asking for donations so that they quote "may carry out their work on behalf of the unborn children of Canada".

May I suggest the society would be doing more benefit to Canada if they asked for donations to help with the upbringing of the thousands of children who are alive and suffering in today's world. — L. Blackstock, 586 Gorge Road West.

For the overflow?

The Wharf Street fast-buck operators will soon be scurrying along to commence building their rats-nest on the newly-acquired preferred water-front property, this location okayed, thanks to a majority vote of the city council for a new convention centre.

As an extra bonus, toss in the unfinished Clover Point sewage project — with a tunnel connection to the underground pumphouse (still serving no useful purpose). This could be used as an annex to accommodate overflow crowds if required.

More information from the news media might have altered this situation and changed this "dirty tricks" set-up; however, the taxpayers will get the message later on if the non-profit society goes belly-up and extra funds are required to keep it operating. — G. A. Mackay, 24 Wellington Avenue.

Time for hard thoughts on handicapped, elderly

By HENRY FAIRLIE
The Washington Post

Our societies are today being asked to devote too many of their resources to the relief of the elderly and the handicapped. It is difficult to say so, of course, without being abused. One is insensitive, it is said, uncompassionate and cruel. The more sentimentally liberal of one's friends — who are easily convinced that they alone have kind feelings — raise their hands in pious unbelief. "You can't really think that," they say; but one has thought hard about it.

One knows that one is going to be accused of kicking the paralyzed, of being little better than hoodlums who tip over wheelchairs in the streets, of being the kind of person who would not help an old lady across the street. Yet one is not entirely alone. Even liberals who are not satisfied with mere sentimentality agree with one's doubts, but they whisper their assent only in dark corners where they will not be overheard.

At the most obvious level, one is asking how much a transit authority or a university or a library or any welfare agency should be expected to spend in removing the inconveniences of the elderly and the handicapped, at an unavoidable cost to others. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the final regulations issued by the Department of Transportation a year ago would be "very expensive" for the "relatively few" who would benefit: an expenditure of $7 billion over the next 30 years to give fewer than 15,000 wheelchair users access to buses and some 2,000 to subways. Each bus or subway trip would cost $38, whereas if there were a better provision of taxis and special automobiles it would cost $7.

The tight budgets of some institutions have been stretched and distorted in recent years by the physical changes which they have had to make to their buildings and the services they must provide. If the full plan for transportation were put into effect, the mayors of cities such as New York, Chicago and Philadelphia say that it would finally bankrupt their rapid transit systems and their cities.

But one is also asking about more than the cost. How far can the idea of citizenship go on being widened until it means that any self-promoting group can claim the right to have its inconveniences removed at whatever cost to society?

Such rights too easily become indistinguishable from privileges. When I was in Wisconsin last month, Gov. Lee Dreyfus was proposing that, since the elderly do not go to school and college, they should be exempt from taxes for education. A story in The Capital Times in Madison described this proposal as "startling and disturbing." In fact it is preposterous. But it is well in line with many of the assumptions which are made today about the rights of individuals. Before long it may be offered as a constitutional amendment.

For any group may now organize itself to bring pressure to bear on the point of leverage in the political system. Rep. Bob Duncan of Oregon was defeated in the Democratic primary two weeks ago by Ron Wyden, whom

FAIRLIE . . . questions costs

The Washington Post described as "a 31-year-old activist for the elderly." As chairman of the transportation subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, Duncan has had the responsibility and courage to ask for some delay in implementing the Department of Transportation's proposals, at least until further studies are made. Wyden, in response, helped to organize the state's Gray Panthers — a revealing enough name — and "his campaign made use of several hundred elderly volunteers." The elderly are a useful army to enroll. They have time on their hands, while the producers and earners are working. Wyden described his victory as "a triumph of grass roots politics," and this is indeed the claim now made for particular groups which are seeking privileges.

It is because the case of the handicapped and the elderly is a hard one that we must be candid about it. For hard cases do not make good law. Apart from the tangible resources which our society has to find, there are also such intangible resources as time and attention. A wholly disproportionate amount of time is now given on television to programs or news items about the elderly and the handicapped. Of course they appeal to our good feelings, just as do photographs of wistful children and the gnarled old, two of the favorite (because simple) subjects of photography. But we are in danger of reserving our sympathy only for such "minorities" and having none left for the daily lot of the "majority."

It is my experience that this majority of reasonably fit people who are the workers and earners are growing more and more tired of having their feelings exploited on behalf of the numberless minorities who can claim to be disadvantaged. We acknowledge that the "middle Americans" have been neglected in recent years. But now it is these same people who must again sacrifice.

It is often said that our "consciousness has been raised" — that phrase which covers so much sloppy good feeling — by bringing the handicapped and the old "out of the closet" — another phrase which is used to excuse so much unthinking self-exposure. At least we are now aware, it is said, of them and their plight. I am not at all sure that this has happened, that our sympathies are engaged in any true way. For as we express our sympathy, we throw off the burden; we need to do nothing as individuals, society will do it all for us.

It is not clear that the idea of the family, for example, today rests on any demanding obligation of its members to each other. Beyond this weakened notion of the family, the idea of voluntary service has declined. Charity is even despised. Some wings of the women's movement have worked themselves into the inexcusable position of claiming that it is wrong for anyone to perform a service for nothing.

The healthy individuals are thus more and more released to go on self-improving, cultivating face-to-face relationships of slender value and lavishing their attention on bodies that are not noticeably so deserving, as society as a whole assumes all the burdens which might interrupt the appointed hour for jogging, and for lovingly mixing the bean sprouts with the cottage cheese. (But the elderly keep going, it is my observation, by heading for the meat department.) The claim that we are more aware of the disadvantaged than in the past is fraudulent and self-serving.

'Budgets over-taxed by their demands'

We may have let the handicapped and the elderly out of the closet, but by turning them out of our homes, and throwing them as wards to the bureaucracies of our societies. We ought to read carefully the recent work of men such as Michel Foucault and his disciple and colleague Jacques Donzelot on "the policing of families," their evidence that children have won independence from parental control but only to fall increasingly under the control of the state, and that "Family patriarchalism was destroyed only at the cost of a patriarchy of the state." We have created what is well called a therapeutic state.

To invite the state to undertake such duties is — as the Chrysler Corp. has discovered in another context — to invite it to exercise supervision and control. But we have placed ourselves in an even worse situation than Chrysler. We will actually pay the state to enslave us as long as it frees us from the individual obligations which we now find it too irksome to meet ourselves.

There is a further harm in it. As our societies are compelled to fix their attention more and more on "minorities" of the disadvantaged — actually or supposedly so — the energy and resources that are needed to deal with general injustices in the social system are neglected and so tolerated. We may no longer sweep the elderly and the handicapped under the carpet — if that is a fair way of describing the arrangements of the past — but instead we set themselves up as totems to assure ourselves of our justice and humanity.

The fact is that we are not enabling the disadvantaged to lead "ordinary lives" by the arrangements now made for them; we are enabling them to lead extraordinary lives by conferring privileges on them as rights. I go about the city on my feet, and gaze at the ramps in the sidewalks, put there at a considerable cost. I have never once seen them used by those for whom they are intended. In Washington, the elevators provided for the handicapped at Metro subway stations are used by only 38 people a day.

I am then told that the handicapped cannot get there because little or no provision is made for them to get to the subway stations on their own. So the provision of exceptional services is just pushed back one more step. If a society can afford ramps for the handicapped, it ought to be able to afford ramps and lanes for the bicyclist, so that the fit may stop using their cars. But the bicyclist is allowed no such benefits.

The majority of the fit who are the producers and earners are not encouraged to use bicycles as they are in some countries of Europe, and one has seriously to ask whether America has not given a wrong-headed priority to wheelchairs over bicycles, which might almost be taken as symbols of the argument. A civilization cannot afford to ignore those who do the work, while bestowing its largesse on minorities who necessarily contribute much less.

Long trail a-winding

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Finally, it didn't seem to matter. Dan Rather came on CBS and said that Ronald Reagan had been nominated, and it just didn't seem to matter. Grandpa wandered into the room where we were all staring at Dan on the illuminated furniture and asked if there was any news, and we told him Reagan had just won the Republican nomination, and Grandpa just said, "Oh, well . . ."

Same when somebody came on and said Jimmy Carter had it all sewed up. "It just doesn't seem to matter, does it?" asked Aunt Pearl. Mother, who believes in everybody voting because it always matters, started to say it really did matter, but subsided when Grandpa said, "Oh, come off it, Mother; the only thing that matters is that it's all over at last."

But Grandpa was wrong. We all knew he was wrong. If he had been right — if it were really all over at last — we would have been celebrating. The streets would have been filled with joyous throngs kissing and hugging and crying and shouting, "It's all over at last!"

It wasn't all over, and we knew it. There were months more of it ahead. Years maybe. True, the New Hampshire primary was behind us, and the Iowa Caucus, and the straw votes in Florida and Maine. True, the Rose Garden was behind us. Jerry Brown was behind us. Gerry Ford was behind us. John Connally was behind us. Momentum was behind us, and the Illinois primary. The exit polls in Wisconsin, the projected winner in South Carolina — they were behind us, too. Looking back on them, trying to remember, we found that we could not.

Three of us could remember exactly where we were and what we were doing when we heard that the Japanese had attacked Pearl Harbor in 1941. Not one of us could recall where he was or what he was doing when he heard that Howard Baker had finished fourth — or was it eighth? — in Texas. Or was it Nebraska?

Some of us had not lived to see this night that no longer seemed to matter. Lonnie, for one, was gone. I remember when Lonnie was just a nipper in kneepants and the polls were all reporting Edward Kennedy a shoo-in for the presidency. "Do you think," asked little Lonnie, "that any of us will live to see the end of the 1980 campaign?"

"You'll live to see it, boy," I told him, "but there's not much chance they'll get it over with in time for Grandpa and Aunt Pearl and Mother and me to see it."

Well, poor old Lonnie passed on last month at the age of 97. "Galloping senility" was the doctor's diagnosis. Lonnie made the mistake of keeping up with everything about the campaign every day. He was so well-informed he could tell you the date John Sears was fired from the Reagan campaign. He could even tell you who John Sears was. Lonnie had taken on 88 years' worth of 1980 campaign knowledge, and the pointlessness of the burden crumpled him up until he looked like an old piece of papyrus.

* * *

I was with him at the end. "If I could just live to see the Michigan and Oregan primaries, I'd be happy," he said, "because then Reagan would have the nomination for sure and Carter would have it pretty well sewed up."

I started to say, "It wouldn't give you any comfort, Lonnie, because after that they're still going to go on for years and years — " Grandpa signalled me not to depress the old fellow in his last moments, however, so I shut up.

We didn't think much about Lonnie the night we saw Reagan win the nomination on CBS. I guess most of us were thinking Lonnie was pretty lucky not to have to go through the next 30 years of the campaign. Mostly we were thinking about ourselves, the way people do when they're really up against it.

"You don't guess they'll give us a break and cancel the conventions now that conventions are unnecessary, do you?" asked Aunt Pearl. I started to tell Aunt Pearl she could bet her sweet patootie they wouldn't cancel the conventions, because how else could the Democrats and Republicans force all three networks to give them two solid weeks of TV time to praise themselves in public. But Grandpa signaled me not to depress poor Aunt Pearl with the realities of American politics.

"There, there, Aunt Pearl," said Grandpa, stroking her. "Remember, we're going to vacation up at the lake before the conventions open and maybe, if you're lucky, the rowboat will turn over and you'll drown before they all start praising themselves on the television."

Later, out on the porch with Grandpa, I asked him to give it to me straight. "Do you think we'll ever get out of the 1980 presidential campaign, Grandpa?"

"Courage, boy. Courage," he murmured. "The 1984 campaign will be with us before you know it."

I told him it was too much and somebody had to do something.

"Boy," he said, "too much is the stuff that made America what it is today. Excess is as American as frozen Chinese TV dinners. Without the spirit of excess, how would America ever have hit on the idea of having the whole country honor its war dead by going on a three-day picnic?"

Thomson branches out

TORONTO (CP) — International Thomson Organisation Ltd. has set up a new company through a subsidiary in the United States to acquire publications and start new ones in the business publishing and information fields, it was announced Thursday.

The new company is International Thomson Business Press Inc. of Philadelphia. It will operate under International Thomson Organisation Inc., also of Philadelphia.

Richard H. Groves has been appointed president and chief executive officer of the new company. He was executive vice-president of The Chilton Co. and publisher of Iron Age before that.

Oil search agreement

RAS AL-KHAIMAH (Reuter) — Gulf Oil of the United States and International Petroleum Co. of Canada today signed concessions to search for oil in the sea off Ras Al-Khaimah Emirate, the United Arab Emirates announced.

The two companies signed a 30-year joint concessions for an area of about 130 square kilometres. Gulf Oil Corp. will operate the concession and said it would start seismic surveys immediately, the announcement said.

Gulf Oil already has one offshore concession in the Emirate.

Meanwhile, the emirate's government also said International Petroleum signed a 30-year concession for all the remaining deep water offshore areas belonging to Ras Al-Khaimah.

Ras Al-Khaimah produces no oil or natural gas at present, but Gulf Oil has discovered a large rock formation which might contain oil.

Cattle

CALGARY (CP) — Receipts to 11 a.m. today at the Calgary public stockyards totalled 750 cattle and calves consisting mainly of slaughter steers with a light supply of slaughter heifers and cows.

Trade was dull from local buyers on all classes of slaughter cattle. A1-2 steers over 1,000 lbs. sold $2 lower. A3-4 steers discounted $3-4. Slaughter heifers sold $2 lower. D1-2 cows $1.50 lower while D3-5 sold $1 lower. Bologna bulls remained steady.

A1-2 steer over 1,000 lbs. $68.50-$70.60; A3-4 63-66. A1-2 heifers over 850 lbs. 65-66.20. D1-2 cows 42-44.50; D3-5 48-42. Good bulls 58-61 with sales to 62.

Moderate receipts of short keep feeder steers and heifers sold $1 lower while feeder cows sold $3 behind last week's close. Good feeder steers over 800 lbs. 69-73.50; 700-800 lbs. 70-75. Good feeder heifers over 700 lbs. 63-67.50; 600-700 lbs. 65-70 Feeder cows 43-53.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed in a drifting session on Wall Street.

The market's spring rally has faltered of late as interest rates turned upward, reversing one of their sharpest declines on record.

Investors also have been confronted with a steady barrage of adverse economic news.

The commerce department reported Monday that orders received by the nation's factories tumbled 5.5 per cent in April for their sharpest decline since the last recession.

Precious-metals stocks retreated as gold prices turned downward after a sharp rise in the past two days. ASA Ltd. dropped ⅝ to $43⅜, Homestake Mining ½ to $53¾ and Dome Mines ⅛ to $70⅛.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The London stock market was higher at the close of moderately active trading.

The Financial Times Index of 30 industrials closed at 420.0, up 7.3

Industrials firmed and oils were mixed.

Canadian stocks were also mixed.

Bonds

Monday

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were lower in quiet trading on the Canadian bond market Monday. The short end of the market was off 20 cents. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues fell three-quarters of a point. Corporate issues dropped one point. Day-to-day money was available at 15 per cent. A decline at New York, due to a heavy corporate and treasury calendar this week, continued fears of inflation and increasing pressures on short-term rates made it difficult for traders in Canada to develop a bearish attitude, an analyst at Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities Ltd. said.

Soviet car plant eyed for Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Lada cars might be assembled in Canada instead of being imported from the Soviet Union in future, the head of the U.S.S.R. trade mission in Canada says.

Igor Konovalov said in a statement the Soviet Union export company, Autoexport, and the Volzhsky auto works in Togliatti have asked Lada Cars of Canada Inc. for proposals to assemble the cars in Canada.

Peter Dennis, president of Lada Cars, a wholly-owned Canadian company, said in the statement he returned from Moscow two weeks ago with a "firm understanding on assembly in Canada" and his company is surveying potential assembly facilities.

Dennis said production might begin with the Niva model, a four-wheel-drive car which will be introduced to the Canadian market this summer.

The statement said a Canadian assembly operation would use domestic sources for as many components as possible. About 11.5 per cent of Lada Cars' current parts inventory is from Canadian sources.

About 10,000 Lada cars have been sold in Canada since imports began in mid-1978 the statement said.

How Saxon outruns Xerox.
(The Saxon 302 vs. the Xerox 2600)

Saxon starts faster. Our Saxon 302 compact plain paper copier starts faster and turns out copies quicker than the new Xerox 2600. That's just for starters.
Saxon runs easier. Our Saxon has superior features. Two paper cassettes holding more than double the paper supply of the Xerox 2600. Press-tone controls. A self-diagnostic system. And a few other advances Xerox hasn't caught up with.
Saxon runs you less money. With all this, the Saxon costs less to buy, rent or maintain than the Xerox.

Wealth of knowledge about harness racing

There's a neat little booklet on the market and every harness racing fan should have a copy.

Interested? Okay.

With this booklet, you have a choice. You can either become a knowledgable expert — "to know it is to love it" — the preamble says of harness racing. Or can you can digest all the fine points of handicapping, which is an added bonus, and secretly what most patrons would like to know more about.

F'r instance, it is said that harness horses, finely conditioned athletic specimens that they are, run more closely to form than in any other type of racing.

Other important factors are:

- The horse's best record time (that's the figure in the middle of the form).
- The size of the track (Sandown is a $\frac{5}{8}$-mile oval compared to Cloverdale's $\frac{1}{2}$-mile track).
- The quality of the opposition (i.e. class again).
- The type of race, and type of race in which the horse recently competed.
- Was the horse "parked out"? (That's a little circle just after the part of the race where the situation occurred).
- Does the horse show breaks (a small "x" indicates this on the past performance lines)?
- The driver's ability, the track condition (fast, slow, sloppy etc).
- And the horse's age and post position.

That's just to start. Then you compare.

★ ★ ★

"Class" is easy to recognize. A horse running in preferred or invitational races is better than a claimer and the higher the claiming price, the better the claimer. All conditions for races are listed in the official program and it isn't too difficult to understand them and make your own classification. Many do.

Best time is important because it shows a horse's ability, whether dormant, or otherwise. And if not at peak form, why?

Some horses (and drivers) like the normal $\frac{1}{2}$-mile track better than the $\frac{5}{8}$-mile surface, but basically the main difference between the two is that there is one less turn on the $\frac{5}{8}$-mile oval, three compared to four. A $\frac{5}{8}$-mile track is generally considered from one to two seconds faster than a $\frac{1}{2}$-miler. Similarly, a mile and a $\frac{3}{4}$-mile track are considered three to four seconds faster than a $\frac{1}{2}$-miler.

The term "parked out" simply means the horse was parked outside of other horses at some time or another during a race and thus lost a lot of ground and with it valuable time on the clock.

That "x" in the form can be a telltale factor as to why a horse hasn't been doing as well as perhaps it should. Something — maybe an injury, too much speed, being raced beyond its ability — is forcing it to break stride. And a wise bettor should be wary especially if there are number of "x"s showing.

"Fast track" and "off track" are terms most punters understand. But few horsemen can explain why some horses run better on a fast strip, while some prefer softer footing. But it's true, and which horse likes which best can be gleaned from the past performance lines as well.

★ ★ ★

Do drivers make a difference? You bet they do. Sure, some of the better ones get better stock, but often they can "move a horse up" that another driver has been just missing with. That's why the same names keep appearing at the top of the drivers lists year after year.

And how much is post position a factor?

It's debatable and depends on a number of factors — the opposition, is the speed inside or outside, the driver, some like to lead, some to come off the pace — but there is one constant. When they all start together it's obvious that the outside horse must travel further than the inside horse and that is why most drivers try to get to the rail as quickly as possible. Mathematicians have it worked out that a horse racing five feet out from the point at which the track is measured will travel 62 feet more than a mile in a mile dash on a $\frac{1}{2}$-mile track, a horse 10 feet out will go 126 feet, 6 inches further and so on . . .

Which is why they hug the rail until they think the correct opportunity for a break-out presents itself. And it's usually right there that the men are separated from the boys. Good drivers are like good jockeys. They carry their stop watch in their head.

So there it is. No problem. And if you get the right odds, bet. But one caution. Don't take any more money to the track than you can afford to lose.

And, oh yes — that booklet. It's free. And so is today's advice.

By ED WALTERS

ST. JOHNS, Nfld. (CP) — Len King was all set to be an umpire at this summer's Canadian junior men's softball championships in Scarborough, Ont., when tournament organizers told him to shave off his beard or stay home.

"It's like saying you can't umpire because of the color of your skin or because of your religion," Peter Harvey, president of the Newfoundland Softball Association said in an interview Monday.

King, a 29-year-old bank executive, said in a separate interview Monday he had been told by Ed Bitz of Saskatoon, umpire-in-chief of the federally-funded softball Canada that he could not officiate at the national championships unless he got rid of his beard.

Harvey quoted Claude Deschamps of Ottawa, executive director of Softball Canada, as saying the decision to bar King would be upheld.

Harvey said the local association is trying to get a written copy of the decision and intends to fight the matter to the end, in the courts if necessary.

"If we've got to we're going to pursue legal advice to get this overturned," Harvey said.

King said that following the normal selection procedure, he had been recommended by the Newfoundland association as one of three candidates to umpire at the national championships. He later received a letter telling him he had been chosen by Softball Canada to go to Scarborough in August.

King said he was surprised to receive the letter saying he had been accepted since he understood the decision to bar him because of the beard had been made following an umpires clinic at Moncton in March.

It was at the clinic that Bitz first saw King and his full facial beard.

King said Bitz told him that because of personal appearance standards, umpires were not permitted to have beards.

Harvey said the Amateur Softball Association of America, recognized as the standard-setter for the sport, has no policy regarding beards.

The only rule about hair is that it be neat and of acceptable length.

Harvey said King's beard has never raised unflattering comment at the bank which employs him.

"Bitz is going to have to be more realistic," Harvey said.

He said Bob Van Impe of Saskatoon, president of the Canadian Softball Association and Gerald Regan, federal minister responsible for sport, both will be approached on the matter.

King has been involved in softball for five years. He said that having gone through the various stages of provincial officiating, he was looking forward to getting on a national level.

Although expressing disappointment with the turn of events, King said he had no intention of shaving off his beard.

Harvey said the Newfoundland association will support King all the way.

From AP-Reuter

PARIS (CP) — Manuel Orantes of Spain refused today to play his postponed fourth-round match at the French Open tennis championships in protest of what he called a breach of Grand Prix tennis rules.

The decision gave his opponent, fourth-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, a free passage into the quarter-finals of the $650,000 tournament.

Meanwhile, the sun shone on centre court and Chris Evert Lloyd, defending champion and favorite for the women's first prize of $42,500, crushed Kathy Jordan 6-2, 6-0 in an all-American duel and moved into the semifinals.

"After all the wind and rain recently, it was great to play in good weather again," Evert Lloyd said. "Bad conditions level up matches. They are worth at least two games to the underdog."

The controversy involving Vilas and Orantes, who was runner-up here in 1974, began Monday when Vilas became ill and requested an hour's delay.

Philippe Chatrier, president of the International Tennis Federation, told a news conference he agreed to Vilas's request for a delay and took full responsibility for the decision. But Orantes said he was not told of that decision.

The Spanish star went on to the court for the match but Vilas did not appear. The tournament committee ordered the match played Tuesday.

Orantes claimed Vilas should have been made to forfeit the match because, under Grand Prix tennis rules, only 15 minutes' delay is allowed to any player.

"I have sometimes been injured, but I have obeyed the rules and gone on court," he said. "I talked it over with the other players and I did what I think was right for the game and for my conscience."

Sixth seed Harold Solomon also advanced to the quarter-finals, with an easy 6-0, 6-1, 6-3 dumping of fellow American Brian Gottfried.

Corrado Barazzutti of Italy, always tough on the slow clay, also advanced to the quarter-finals with a 6-4, 6-2, 7-6 victory over Peter McNamara of Australia.

Meyer's mark stands

By The Associated Press

It took a long time to come to no decision at Detroit, but at least Dan Meyer, Tom Paciorek and Kirk Gibson have something to show for it.

Seattle Mariners and Detroit Tigers battled for 13 innings Monday night before their American League baseball game was rained out.

In Chicago, the White Sox and Texas Rangers also had their game rained out, but they did it in six innings.

Seattle and Detroit were tied 3-3 when the rains made play impossible. The Rangers-White Sox contest was tied 1-1.

Baseball rules state that individual records must stand when a game is stopped after passing the point at which it would have been considered official. The game itself, however, doesn't count and must be played over.

Meyer tied a club record with five hits in six trips to the plate, including a triple. Paciorek had three hits and two runs batted in while Gibson, a rookie, slammed his eighth home run of the season.

In other AL games Monday, Baltimore needed 11 innings to edge Milwaukee 9-8, California stopped Toronto 6-3, Cleveland crushed Oakland 10-5, Boston beat Minnesota 6-2 and New York downed Kansas City 5-3.

Madlock turns to Kuhn

PITTSBURGH (AP) — National League President Chub Feeney has ruled Bill Madlock's 15-day suspension must stand, but the Pittsburgh Pirates third baseman won't take that lying down.

And it remains to be seen how future developments in the month-old case sit with the major league umpires' union.

Through the players association, Madlock lodged another appeal with baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn hours after Feeney made his final decision.

So Madlock remains in the lineup while Kuhn considers a matter that began May 1 with a jab of Madlock's glove at the face of umpire Jerry Crawford and escalated to arguments and affadivits from lawyers for the players' and the umpires' unions.

"I find the penalties originally levelled to be appropriate," Feeney said Monday in New York in upholding his penalty, including a $5,000 fine.

"The major league umpires association is gratified that the endless delays in the Madlock appeal have now come to an end," said Paul Runge, vice-president of the umpires' union, which threatened to eject Madlock from every game to speed up Feeney's ruling.

There were other views.

"Feeney upholds Feeney," said Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association. "That's no surprise. This represents a mockery of due process."

Trainer Wayne Lukas and owner Joseph Binger of Codex at hearing

Preakness stewards certain they made correct decision

BALTIMORE (AP) — State stewards testified Monday that they had made the correct decision in disallowing a foul claim against Codex, winner of the Preakness Stakes.

"The more I see these films, the more certain I am that the right decision was made," steward Clinton Pitts told the thoroughbred board of the Maryland Racing Commission.

Similar comments were made by stewards J. Fred Colwill and Edward Litzenberger, the only witnesses called during an all-day session in the clubhouse at Pimlico.

Diana and Bertram Firestone, the owners of Genuine Risk, have asked that the stewards' decision be reversed.

Henry Lord, representing the Firestones, is expected to begin questioning the first of his eight witnesses when the hearing resumes this morning. They include the owners, trainer Leroy Jolley, jockey Jacinto Vasquez and patrol judge Coleman Blind.

In his opening statement, Lord contended that jockey Angel Cordero Jr. aboard Codex had made a premeditated move to obstruct Genuine Risk coming into the homestretch. He argued Genuine Risk had been impeded, bumped or jostled, and was either struck or intimidated by Cordero's whip.

On one tape played during the tedious session, Blind is heard telling Colwill, who was in the stewards' stand: "Oh, the 3's (Codex) carrying the 5 (Genuine Risk) wide, judge."

Blind, who in a patrol stand at the quarter pole, near the location of the alleged infraction, said later on the intercom: "Cordero looked back just prior to the quarter pole, knew the filly was coming and carried her wide."

A written report, received by the stewards on Monday, May 19, had additional observations from Blind on Cordero, including: "it appeared he took No. 5 wide on purpose."

But the stewards, who said they looked at numerous reruns before making a decision, did not believe a serious infraction had occurred. Litzenberger, a former jockey, said "There was possibly a brush, that's as much as I've ever made out of it. There was possibly touching, but hardly enough to break an egg."

Pines are fine, and many, but only one Gallaghers

Saturday's guests — 253 invited but numbering over 280 before the day ended — arrived mostly by aircraft — on regular flights, in chartered craft or in private planes. A few came by car. They all were handed free golf shirts, a half-dozen balls and assorted other goodies, then socialized, played golf, ate barbecued New York cuts and drank champagne. An Arabian shiek and an assorted number of industrialists stood in the same line at the buffet table with car dealers, electricians, doctors, accountants, greenskeepers and the rest.

Sunday's turnout was bigger, more boisterous. Open house for Kelowna's citizenry, and they came by droves. An estimated 2,500 came out Sunday to demolish 1,000 hamburgers and cause a couple of hundred cases of beer to evaporate in record time. Only 430, utilizing every tee-off time from 6 a.m. until 7:30 p.m., could be squeezed in to play golf.

That is how they opened Gallaghers Canyon. Par 35-36 — 71, 6,200 yards off the medium tees, and a golf course destined to become one of the most delightful ones in all of Canada.

It was, by rough estimate, a $50,000 bash. The figure comes from an account-minded authority, but even that seems to be conservative.

It was a weekend Kelowna will never forget.

If you enjoy scenic beauty with your golf, Gallaghers Canyon is a winner. The delight of visits to courses such as Jasper, Banff and Vancouver Capilano is constant, but, to my mind, Kokanee Springs in the Kootenays is one of the most magnificent I have seen. Gallaghers Canyon does not have the high-mountain grandeur of Kokanee Springs but is in the same awe-inspiring class.

Six miles or 20 minutes out of downtown Kelowna, Gallaghers Canyon is in the Mission area to the southeast and overlooking the city.

As of Sunday, about 400 had made a move for membership. In time, members will be added from the homes that will eventually surround the course. Construction of housing will be the next major phase of development.

Thanks to an extensive but intricate watering system, the course was in remarkable condition for the opening.

The course architect took excellent advantage of the terrain. He kept it short enough to keep the average golfer in the game.

The premium is not on distance but accuracy. If you lack accuracy, you shouldn't start your round without an adequate supply of balls. Canyons, several well-placed ponds and some still-to-be-cleared underbrush will quickly claim errant balls.

Roxburgh, incidentally, played in a foursome with Hamish McMickin, the British doctor Roxburgh defeated in the quarter-finals of the British Amateur last year.

It was strictly fun day. No tournament, but Harold Pasechnik, an Alberta Willingdon Cupper, started with a five-under 30 and wound up with a 68 to score the best round of the weekend — a three-under 68. Jim Rutledge, one of several Victorians invited, scored one-under 70s in his first two rounds over Gallaghers Canyon.

It brought out celebrities such as singer-composer Terry Jacks, former hockey stars and a flock of golf professionals and excellent amateurs.

Saturday also brought back a page from the past. It was a reunion, of sorts, for Ernie Brown, Hank Mitchell, Les Patterson and Angus MacKenzie. The four all caddied at Old Shaughnessey in Vancouver 50 years ago.

It was originally named Kelowna Pines, not a bad-sounding name for a golf club.

So why the change?

"I stopped counting at 62, but there must be a couple of hundred courses in North America with the 'Pines' name," said the Victoria-reared Munn. "But there is only one Gallaghers Canyon."

McDonalds score first win

It took 11 games, but McDonald's Furniture finally hit pay dirt in a Victoria Saanich Senior Women's Softball League game at Hyacinth Park, Monday night.

McDonalds managed their first win this season, bouncing Athletics 8-1 behind Marydie Starch's two-hitter.

Nancy McLachlan pitched a four-hitter to guide New York-New York to a 4-0 shutout over Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart in the other game.

The win moved New York-New York into second place with a 7-3-2 record.

Laurie Carmen went three-for-three at bat for McDonalds and Carlene Mackereth was three-for-four.

McLachlan struck out four batters and walked three while going the distance while Yeta Dilalla, Theresa Stone, Chris Webster and Janet Goldade each contributed two hits to the New York offence. Goldade also drove in two runs.

In Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's play at Topaz Park, Sooke defeated Safeway 11-2 and Allman's Joy tripped Lakehill Meats, 26-14.

At Macdonald Park, Graham McLeod threw a two-hitter as Coast Projects blanked Saints 10-0 and Ivan Pearson drove in the tying and winning runs as Mayfair Insurance downed Trafalgar Legion 4-2 in the Macdonald Men's League.

Superstar gets boot by Blizzard

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto Blizzard have announced the release of World Superstars champion Brian Budd by the North American Soccer League club.

"We reached a settlement on his contract for this year," said Blizzard president Clive Toye. "He wanted a greater opportunity to play.

Budd, a three-time winner of the World Superstars television competition as well as a three-time winner of the Canadian Superstars, will try to catch on with another NASL team.

Craig a Bruin

BOSTON (AP) — United States Olympic and former Boston University goaltender Jim Craig says he has modeled himself after Boston Bruins' goalie Gerry Cheevers.

The two goaltenders became team-mates Monday when Sinden announced the Bruins had acquired Craig in a trade with Atlanta Flames.

Boston genera manager Harry Sinden dismissed any possibility that Craig, a rookie in the National Hockey League, would be sent to a farm team for further training.

"We didn't acquire him for the American League," he said. "We feel Jim is about to become a very solid National League goaltender.

"We're impressed with his style of challenging shooters."

The Bruins give the Flames a second-round draft choice this year and either a third-round this year or a fifth-round choice next year. Sinden said the Bruins will choose the option soon.

Meadmore's home run breaks tie

Brian Meadmore slammed a two-run homer in the fifth inning Monday to snap a 2-2 deadlock and get Lumberworld started on an 8-3 romp over Quadra Warehouse in a Victoria Cosmopolitan Senior Baseball League game at Lambrick Park.

Meadmore also had another RBI and Rick Shelton contributed three hits and two RBIs to the victory.

Great start for Wales

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (Reuter) — Wales made a superb start in its bid to reach the 1982 World Cup finals in Spain by overwhelming Iceland 4-0 in its opening European group three qualifying match Monday.

A goal by Ian Walsh of English First Division club Crystal Palace in the dying seconds of the opening half sent the Welsh on their way and they poured in three more after the half.

The second half scorers were David Giles in the 53rd minute, Brian Flynn in the 60th and Walsh with his second in the 74 minute.

The other teams in group three are Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and Turkey.

St. Mikes top independent

BURNABY — St. Michael's University School of Victoria topped all three age categories in the B.C. independent schools track and field championships Sunday at Swangard Stadium.

SMU won the seniors with 107 points, the under-16s with 137 and the under-14s with 137.

St. George's of Vancouver was runner-up in seniors and under-16s while Shawnigan Lake finished second in under-14s.

Seal won the under-14 100 metres, 110-metre hurdles, high jump and triple jump; Waldie topped the under-16 400, 800 and triple jump; Fennerty claimed wins in the senior 110 and 400 hurdles; and Baird claimed victories in the senior 800 and 1,500.

Baird's time of one minute, 57.9 seconds in the 800 was a meet record.

Two Shawnigan Lake athletes also set marks in the senior category. Mike Gillies cleared 3.86 metres in the pole vault and Robert Cook topped 1.86 metres in the high jump.

Berenson signs one-year pact

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Red Berenson signed a one-year contract to coach St. Louis Blues next season, the National Hockey League club announced Monday.

Berenson took over the Blues last December and led the team to a 27-20-9 record. His winning percentage, .562, is the best of any coach in St. Louis's history.

Peterson, Atherton in final

Leona Peterson and Marjorie Atherton of Burnside have collected berths in the British Columbia singles lawn bowling championships scheduled to start Friday at Stanley Park Greens in Vancouver.

In another qualifying event, the Zone VI women's team has been determined for the B.C. Summer Games in Kelowna, Aug. 14-17.

Bryant, Buckley spark Universals

Esquimalt Universal Sheet Metal ran an unbeaten streak to five games Monday by bouncing Saanich 14-8 in a Vancouver Island Senior "B" Lacrosse League game at Pearkes Arena.

In another game, Victoria Athletics improved their record to 2-3 by defeating G&W Landscaping, 17-10.

Randy Bryant led the Esquimalt attack with five goals and Steve Buckley added three. Bruce Lubinich led Saanich (now 2-3) with three goals.

Dwayne Ferguson and Kevin Kennedy each scored four goals and had four assists to spark Athletics while Mark Schoor contributed two goals and five assists. Lyle Gurney (four and three) and Rav Pallan (three and one) topped Landscapers (1-4).

Golf buttons change hands

Terry Whittaker and Jim Milbrath of Glen Meadows captured the seniors golf buttons Monday by defeating Ralph Baker and Art Bryant of Royal Colwood 2 and 1 at Cedar Hill Golf Club.

It marked the first time a Glen Meadows twosome has taken the buttons since August, 1979.

Honors for Crystalettes

PORT ALBERNI — Victoria Crystalettes captured 15-and-over routine team laurels in the British Columbia synchronized swimming age-group championships here at the weekend.

Saskia Action, Lisa Devana, Brenda Radley, Lynn Porterfield, Kelly Boyd and Heather Middleton compiled 61.333 points to top six other teams.

Victoria also won combined honors — figures and routine — with an aggregate of 115.8969 points.

Lloyd finished first in the 15-and-over figures with 62.6663. Her solo merited third place and her combined solo and figure marks earned another third spot.

Middleton was third in figures.

MBABANE (AFP) — Swaziland will not be represented at the Moscow Olympics because its only international-standard athlete suffered a muscle injury.

The statement said Africa's marathon champion, Richard Mabuza, was out of action because of the injury and he was the only person in the small kingdom up to Olympic standards.

Yachtsman swept overboard

PLYMOUTH, England (AP) — A British yachtsman, helping to guide a Greek entry through the English Channel for a trans-Atlantic yacht race that starts next weekend, is missing after being swept overboard.

Organizers of the race for lone yachtsmen, sponsored by The Observer newspaper, reported that the search for the Robert MacCutchon, 35, has been abandoned.

White elephant sale for CBC studio here

The unfinished CBC tele-vision studios at Blanshard and Kings will be sold later this month, CBC official Len Lauk said Monday.

"It's going to be placed for sale on the market," Lauk said.

No set price is specified, although the sale is expected to bring in well over $1 million. The property alone was purchased by the CBC from the city for $500,000 five years ago.

The Crown corporation will call for bids on the building and property later this month, with a deadline of July 31.

Lauk said he had some tentative discussions with people interested in leasing the building, but they came to nothing.

The brightly-painted red, yellow and orange building behind Victoria Press has been empty for almost two years and lately has been subject to vandalism.

It was specifically designed as television studios for a proposed Victoria CBC station on Channel 10, but budget cuts forced the corporation to cancel these plans and turn the licence back to the CRTC.

Several groups are known to be interested in the licence for the last slot left on the VHF television dial in this region of B.C.

The CRTC still has not announced future plans for disposition of the licence.

The CBC's announcement concerned the CFRE Public Broadcastibg Society of Victoria. Treasurer John Elliott said if the building is sold it would substantially weaken CFRE's plans to start a public, commercial-free TV station on Channel 10, using the vacant CBC building.

Lauk said the building would be best suited for broadcast purposes and needs only to be wired and equipped for that use, but it could be converted to some other need.

Mayor Bill Tindall of Victoria has suggested it could be used as regional headquarters for the centralized services proposed for the five municipal police forces in the area, such as identification, records and dispatch.

45% hike for UVic research

University of Victoria scientists are getting a 45-per-cent boost in research grants from the federal government, mostly for equipment.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council has designated $1.53 million for more than 90 UVic projects in biology, chemistry, biochemistry, computer science, maths, psychology and physics, and involving 83 researchers.

Discounting the equipment grants, the university is getting a 12.3-per-cent hike in operating funds from the council.

By the mid-1980s it is the federal government's aim to devote 1.5 per cent of the gross national product to developing research and practical applications.

Victoria losing RV tourists

Greater Victoria is losing thousands of tourist dollars a day during the summer because of a shortage of space for recreation vehicles, Saanich council was told Monday.

RV traffic crossing by ferry to Vancouver Island is estimated at 450 vehicles a day between July and August, a spokesman for Dogwood Trailer Club said.

Those vehicles head north because there isn't enough overnight parking in Victoria, according to Charles Cameron, 1568 Oakcrest.

"Multiply that amount by 400 campers and the total is $16,000 a day."

Cameron was supporting a request for council approval of a trailer park next to the Playland curling club on Glanford.

Playland spokesman Les Bryce said the unused parking lot next to Playland could provide space for 75 vehicles for three months during the summer.

Municipal planner Gil Laurenson recommended council turn down the application because the use will eventually conflict with the Royal Oak industrial park.

The application was tabled two weeks for further study.

The committee also voted to refer to public hearing an application by Den-Alan Nurseries Ltd. to rezone a 4.6-hectare (11.3 acres) rural property at 4290 Blenkinsop Road to allow wholesale nursery use.

The committee set June 25-26 for meetings at Claremont school to discuss the Cordova Bay community plan with residents.

Sales tax for bus bill?

Esquimalt Mayor Ken Hill and most of his council want transit deficits financed through a half of one per cent hike in the provincial sales tax.

They decided Monday to send a resolution to the next convention of the Union of B.C. Municipalities.

Mayor Hill said his council's position is that a property tax is unfair and a gasoline tax would be paid by rural people who must have a vehicle since there is no transit system for them.

With a boost in sales tax, those who have the money would pay.

Residents of the Gulf Islands also don't like the surcharge on their electricity bills.

Petitions are being circulated on Salt Sring, Pender and Galiano Islands and residents plan to present them to the Capital Regional Board.

"It's stupid to bring it (the surcharge) out here," said Yvette Valcourt, the board's Salt Spring representative.

"We have nothing to do with urban transit. We don't even have a bus."

Hustle bus fare up 38%

After barely four months of operating a daily service between Victoria and Vancouver International Airport, Hustle Bus Ltd. has boosted its fare from $10.50 to $14.50 — 38 per cent.

Passengers also pay a $3 ferry charge for the trip, meaning the total one-way fare is now $17.50.

The company also hiked the fare to Victoria Airport from $4 to $5.

Both increases went into effect Sunday.

A spokesman for the company said: "The Motor Carrier Commission has been sitting on our application for three months."

As Hustle Bus only started its Vancouver airport service Jan. 28, this means the company applied for the increase in the month immediately after.

The firm began its service after the MCC ordered Convair Coach Lines to suspend its bootleg service.

Convair had applied for a licence to legitimize the service it was already offering, but the commission turned the company down, pointing out that Hustle Bus was already licenced to service the route.

Convair appealed, but on Friday the commission confirmed its January ruling, which included the cease and desist order on the illegal service.

Sewage plan asinine: region

The Cowichan Valley Regional District has been shocked by an environment ministry recommendation that untreated sewage be dumped into Satellite Channel at Cherry Point.

"I cannot understand how this proposal would come from the environment ministry's waste management branch," said director Gerry Giles.

"If a proposal like this had come from industry, it would be more understandable. But from the pollution control branch? It's one of the most asinine ideas I've heard in a long time."

The suggestion came from J.W. Thomas, regional waste manager of the pollution control branch for the Vancouver Island region.

He said the current system of discharging sewage from Duncan and North Cowichan in the the Cowichan River could result in increasing algae growth and possible closure of the river for recreation.

As a long-term solution, he suggested the CVRD construct a sewage trunk main to collect and transport the sewage to Cherry Point.

"Because of the strong current flows in Satellite Channel, it might not be necessary, initially, to treat sewage from a properly designed and located outfall."

The board unanimously opposed Thomas's suggestion and agreed to explore other solutions.

Pollution charge levied at Rayonier

The Rayonier mill at Port Alice on northern Vancouver Island has been in gross violation of its pollution permit for more than two years, NDP MLA Colin Gabelmann (North Island) charged Monday.

A company spokesman denied the charge.

Gabelmann told the legislature the permit already allows emissions 2½ times the normal federal health standard but according to an internal company memo, it has actually been emitting double the level allowed on the permit.

At times emissions have been more than 10 times what is allowed by federal health standards, he said.

In 1979 alone, Gabelmann said, there were 260 sulphur dioxide poisonings among mill workers, 97 of them requiring immediate first-aid attention.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers and Labor Minister Jack Heinrich promised to investigate.

Bernie Garrood, manager of the mill, said later Gabelmann is distorting the statistics. He said it is part of a plant safety program to encourage employees to report immediately to the first aid station if they smelled sulphur.

The manager also refuted the MLA's statement that Rayonier's head office had refused to approve money to instal gas recovery stack units to reduce or eliminate sulphur emissions. An expenditure of $5.6 million has been approved and filters will be installed this year, Garrood said.

"We've been concerned that construction of the plant wasn't what they said it would be."

The design specifications for the Trojan plant require it be able to shut down safely after an earthquake with a ground acceleration of 25 per cent of the force of gravity.

The commission now is requiring the utility to strengthen masonary walls at the plant's auxiliary building, the fuel building and the control building to withstand greater seismic stress, Trammell said. He also said the commission had questioned whether the concrete walls in the plant's control building were strong enough.

The earthquakes produced by Mount St. Helens have not been strong enough to test the plant's existing seismic capacity, officials said.

The Trojan plant began producing power in 1976. It has operated about 60 per cent of the time, according to the commission, and has been run at an average of 49.4 per cent of capacity.

It produces about a third of the Portland area's power and about an eighth of Oregon's electricity.

Possible volcanic activity was considered by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in granting a license for the Trojan plant. While not ruling out a large eruption at Mount St. Helens or other Cascades volcanoes, commission scientists concluded in 1978 that "there is no present increase in volcanic activity in the Cascade volcanoes . . . The historic record shows that Mount St. Helens was far more active during the 19th Century than during the 20th.

Coffee going up

TORONTO (CP) — General Foods is increasing the wholesale price of instant coffee about 30 cents for a 10-ounce jar.

Company spokesman George Beatty said the increase was necessary because of the "increased cost of everything else, such as energy and transportation."

General Foods sells Maxwell House, Sanka, Yuban, Mellow Roast and Brim.

The increase in the price of instant coffee follows the 20-cent-a-pound rise in regular coffee announced by the company two weeks ago.

John Howard . . . back from the brink

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Five years ago the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island was on the verge of collapse.

Today it is prospering as never before in its 45-year history, helping prison inmates and their families.

When the members of the society gather Thursday at Princess Mary Restaurant for their annual meeting they'll have cause to applaud their change in fortune.

The society has never been in better financial shape. This year's budget of a quarter million dollars is 2½ times the size of 1975. Staff over the same period has gone from three to 15. And the number of volunteers has swollen from 70 in 1978 to 111.

How has it all come about?

"We've changed with the times," says Willie Blonde, the society's executive-director.

Prior to 1975, he says, the traditional image of the society was one of individual casework approach. The emphasis was on counselling offenders whether in jail or on parole.

But then the government corrections agencies began to take over much of that work and the society found itself nearly out of business.

It reached a nadir in 1975 when the society was reduced to little more than a telephone answering and referral service.

Blonde joined the organization that fall.

His first task, he says, was to look for other things the society could do.

The mandate was clear — get the community more involved; develop new programs.

While members steadfastly agreed that services to prisoners should remain the principal aim, they set their sights on two other objectives.

One was to develop alternatives to prison.

The other was to act as a watchdog over the justice system to urge reforms and promote greater public awareness of prisoners' needs.

The measure of their success lies in the nine programs the society now has in operation in Victoria, Nanaimo and Campbell River.

The programs are varied. They include a Neighborhood Accountability Board which was set up last year in Nanaimo to provide juveniles with an alternative to the court process.

Board members, all volunteers, review cases and work out arrangements for restitution, community work and rehabilitation.

Blonde says the board has handled 65 cases to date of which 56 have been successfully completed.

Also in Nanaimo the society is supervising a fine option program, the first of its kind in the province.

Persons who can't afford to pay fines are given an opportunity to pay their debts through community work projects.

Last year, too, the society took over supervision of community work services in the Campbell River area at the request of the B.C. corrections branch and launched an Island-wide Job Search program for persons leaving jail. Since October jobs have been found for 43 ex-inmates out of a caseload of 128.

Blonde says it is ironical the evolution of a more community-based approach has come about during a time when hard-line conservatism is on the upswing.

He sees the red-neck attitudes emerging whether he's talking to a service club group or high school class.

"The only way to counter the conservatism is know what you believe and basically preach it.

"If you start talking to them about their involvement, if you show them some of the facts about costs and what jails do to people, it's surprising how many are accepting of new approaches."

The annual cost to keep a person behind bars is running between $20,000 and $25,000. New prison construction costs $110,000 a bed.

Blonde says 75 per cent of those in prison are there as a result of non-violent crimes.

"There's obviously a need to lock up violent offenders. But there have to be other ways to deal with non-violent offenders.

"You only have to look at the effect a jail has on a person. It doesn't rehabilitate him. It doesn't provide a deterrent to others.

"The only thing jail does is punish, which is okay. If we do wrong we got to expect to pay.

"But at what cost to the individual and to his family?

TOWN TALK

The movie's called Soft is the Heart of a Child and senior aides to Energy Minister Bob McClelland winced visibly when the minister suggested they join him in a screening preview.

McClelland, when he held the health ministry portfolio, was outspoken on the problems and evils of overconsumption of alcohol and that's what the film's about. It's a dramatic portrayal of alcohol's devastation of a family.

An aide, who shall remain nameless, said the film — the work of the San Diego-based Ray Kroc Foundation — is probably the most moving film of its kind ever made.

You can see it this Friday free of charge at the Newcombe Auditorium at 12.15 p.m.

There is a distinctively nautical air about Victoria with the sea breezes and the smell of salt water which may be why B.C. Real Estate president George Yen made the slip of the tongue at the convention now in town.

Like many Gulf Islanders, Yvette Valcourt is incensed about the transit levy that's turned up on her Hydro bill and she's let it be known she's not going to pay it.

So no one was surprised Saturday to see the tireless Salt Spring rep to the Capital Regional District circulating a petition at the Ganges farmers' market calling on government to put a stop to the nonsense.

The surprise came Sunday morning after Mass at Our Lady of Grace Roman Catholic Church.

There was Valcourt, clipboard in hand, petition at the ready, an impassioned rejection of unfair taxation on her lips.

It seems Valcourt keeps the Sabbath holy by fighting a holy war.

This is the third year islanders have staged the zany sea festival.

Valdy, the island's own folk singing star, will stage a concert Friday evening, featuring himself, Shari Ulrich and the Claire Lawrence band.

The late James M. Minifie, who died in Victoria in 1974, is being honored by the University of Regina.

University president Dr. Lloyd Barber announced this week a national campaign to raise $500,000 for a new school of journalism to be named after Minifie, who graduated from the Regina campus of the University of Saskatchewan in 1929 and rose to become one of Canada's foremost journalists and long-time CBC Washington correspondent.

Minifie's widow, Elizabeth, will serve as honorary patron of the fund-raising drive and another Victoria resident, Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, a life-long friend of Minifie, will be campaign chairman.

Barber said the fund has already received advance gifts and pledges totalling $107,250.

University of Victoria's Anik-B satellite link with remote community colleges will be a pipeline Thursday for prospective first-year students.

Without leaving home the curious will be encouraged to ask questions about life on campus, in readiness for registration in September.

The TV system is used to give community college students at Port Alberni, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Prince George, Dawson Creek, Mackenzie, Fort St. John, Ft. Nelson and Whitehorse access to university extension courses.

In a special program, Grade 12 students about to graduate and within easy distance of these communities, will be able to see a panel of UVic admissions personnel, counsellors and Alma Mater Society president Angus Christian on their screens and ask questions about financial aid, housing, and other university services or student activities.

A corps of youthful travel counsellors hired by the tourism ministry last summer is back again this year to help holidayers find their way around.

On the two major ferry routes between Vancouver Island and the mainland 13 teenagers clad in bright blue will answer questions ranging from ridiculous to the mundane.

"There are a lot of funny questions, like kids looking for the washrooms by asking where the poopdeck is," says one of last year's counsellors, Betty Sheehan. "But for the most part people just want to know what they should see around the province."

Counsellors get to meet lots of people, but the job has one hazard — sore feet.

Saanich council has contributed $500 to the Canadian Arthritic and Rheumatism Society in memory of former police chief Bert Pearson, 68, who died last week.

A moment of silence in memory of Pearson, who retired in 1971 after 33 years on the force, was held before Monday's meeting.

Aldermen hold back on rest home safety

City council's fire prevention committee today delayed any action on fire safety upgrading ordered for a Victoria rest home for fear it could force it to close and turn out 30 elderly and handicapped patients.

Aldermen also learned that another 500 residents in about 30 more city nursing homes may be similarly affected by orders from the Victoria fire department.

The owners of Grant Place, 998 Humboldt, appealed to council the March 18 order from the department demanding they make improvements in 14 areas to bring the building up to the standards of the national building code.

The fire department found after inspecting the 80-year-old former private home the following violations of the building code relating to fire safety: exits and entrances, secondary means of egress, fire separation and resistance in stairways and halls, illuminated markings and signs and emergency lighting.

Lawrence Hitchmough said he was willing to make some of the improvements but if he was ordered to do them all at once it would cost $40,000 to $50,000, estimating a number of beds and cost him $12,000 to $24,000 a year income.

As all his patients are subsidized by the provincial government at the standard fee, Hitchmough said he cannot raise his rates to cover the extra costs as a home with private patients could.

He also pointed out that the fire department came round six months ago and gave Grant Place a clean bill of health.

Fire Chief Eric Simmons said this was true, but that was before the department had got around to extending its upgrading program to nursing homes.

Ald. Ken Sinclair said Grant Place was just the tip of the iceberg and how city council handled the appeal would establish an important precedent affecting the health and safety of many elderly residents of Victoria.

Fire department inspector Gordon Ferris told the committee about 30 other city nursing homes face similar fire upgrading orders, which house on average 12 to 15 patients each.

Mayor Bill Tindall noted that council had given relief to owners of apartments who last year were the target of fire upgrading orders, but nursing homes were different as the patients were usually elderly and infirm.

He said council should uphold the fire chief's order on Grant Place.

But a compromise suggested by committee chairman Ald. Bob Wright was passed.

The committee deferred the matter for two weeks while Hitchmough huddles with the fire department to determine which improvements he is willing to make now.

City manager Jim Bramley was also instructed to write to the provincial government pointing out the financial hardship one department of government — the fire marshal in the A-G's ministry — is creating for nursing home owners subsidized by another government department, the health ministry.

Thief flees room panting

Police said the startled burglar grabbed the man's pants and fled out the door.

The burglar not only got away — the pants contained the man's wallet and $150.

The incident occurred about 5:30 a.m.

Police believe the same thief may have been responsible for break-ins reported about two hours earlier at another apartment at 845 Burdett a few blocks away.

But the thief goofed. Police said he missed the wad of bills.

Officers later learned another suite had been entered and $140 stolen from a wallet in a man's pants.

Three other suites may also have been entered. Keys, stolen from the apartment maintenance room, were in the locks when officers arrived at the scene.

Members of the Retail Clerks Union continue to picket Woodward's in Victoria and Port Alberni today with conflicting reports on what effect the action is having.

Union spokesman Bryan Denton said today 80 per cent of the company's business has dropped off in Port Alberni as a result of the picketing which began Monday morning.

But the company said it is business as usual both there and in Victoria.

The view of the strike's effects was not the only area of disagreement as the parties differ on a number of items related to issues in dispute.

The Retail Clerks Union, Local 1518, was certified last October to represent the food store employees at Woodward's Victoria store in the Mayfair mall. Efforts to reach an agreement on a first contract broke down about three weeks ago.

There are about 145 employees involved, the majority of them part-time.

The major issue is not wages but pensions, union security and other benefits such as an in-store, 15-per cent discount, length of coffee breaks and a company profit sharing plan.

Denton said the employees had agreed at the bargaining table to take less in wages than they would have been given had they not joined the union in order to win some of the other benefits.

The part-timers agreed to accept $17 less a week, he said.

The company's profit sharing plan was not an issue when the talks broke off, he said, as the union had withdrawn its demand that the employees continue to have that benefit.

The employees already have the store discount and the longer coffee break so the union's demands would not have cost the company an awful lot more than they are paying now, Denton said.

Brown said the union never agreed at the bargaining table to accept reduced wages nor did it ever state that it was backing off on the profit-sharing plan.

BATvan returns

BATvan is back looking for drinking drivers.

The unit, manned by six officers, was in Colwood and Langford Monday night when 400 cars were stopped.

A police spokesman said the patrols will continue in the western communities

Pipe-swinging started over debt, says victim

A trial in B.C. Supreme Court Monday was told an incident which led to three persons being charged with attempted murder started when the victim — a hospital patient — struck one of the accused with a piece of pipe during a dispute over a debt.

Terrence Roy Adams was testifying at the first day of the trial of William Lloyd Christie, 45, William Richard Johnson, 34, and Ardienne Elizabeth Langer, 35, who are accused of attempting to murder Adams by striking him with a pipe while he lay in his Victoria General Hospital bed Dec. 23 and of wounding him with intent.

Adams told defence counsel Douglas Christie, representing Langer and Christie (no relation), he was not in danger of dying from the injuries to his head and hands which he described as not serious.

Asked if Christie used more force than necessary to stop him from hitting Christie again, Adams replied "no he didn't."

Adams told defence counsel Michael O'Connor, representing Johnson, that he thought Johnson was trying to break up the struggle between him and Christie. He said Johnson grabbed Christie's arm and said "let's go." He said Johnson never struck him.

Adams said he overdosed on prescription pills and was visited by his girlfriend Dec. 23 in hospital. She brought him something wrapped in Christmas paper and told him he may need it and she didn't want to see him again. He put it under his pillow.

He said the day he overdosed and had to go to hospital (Dec. 22), he bought prescription pills from "Rick" in the Century Inn and agreed to sell him five grams of cocaine for $450 but, he told court, he never had any cocaine. He left for the Bastion Inn with Rick's money but overdosed.

Just after his girlfriend left him on the hospital visit, he was visited by three people. He identified Christie and Johnson as two of the people but could not identify the third.

Christie, he said, had loaned him $40 a week earlier but he hadn't repaid the debt.

Christie stood at the end of the bed and asked: "Where's my $40? I need my $40, Christmas is coming up and I need it."

Adams said he replied "hit the road," meaning leave him alone.

Adams said he turned over in his bed and put his hand under the pillow where the tubular object was but Christie turned him over and said: "Listen, I need that money." Adams said he replied: "Hit the road, you're not getting it."

He swung his right arm with the tubular object in his hand striking Christie's forearm, sat up and swung again, hitting him on the shoulder and chest. Christie grabbed him and there was a struggle and he was hit by Christie "no more than three times."

Adams said he didn't come forward at the preliminary hearing because he felt there would be charges against him for possessing an offensive weapon and assault.

He owed Rick $450 and decided to leave for Alberta as soon as he left hospital Dec. 26.

The trial, presided over by Mr. Justice Gordon MacKinnon, was to continue today.

Before the judge

Judge Lorne Pearce told a 33-year-old woman in provincial court Monday to decide whether she wants to sell her vehicle or go to jail.

Lorraine Arlene Podgorenko, 2500 Florence Lake Road, pleaded guilty to theft over $200 between April 9 and May 23 from Night Owl Foods.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Podgorenko, also known as Welch and Spencer, was employed at the food store as a storekeeper and cashier. He said the store owner became suspicious over shortages and installed a video monitor.

Laughton said she was seen taking items such as a deck of cards, Loto Canada tickets, cigarettes, sandwiches, coffee, cash, and other food items on May 21, 22, and 23. Estimate of the loss sustained by the store was placed at $1,350.

Podgorenko was convicted of theft Sept. 19, 1968, and Jan. 31, 1973, getting a suspended sentence on both occasions and probation for six months the first time and for one year the second.

When Pearce asked Podgorenko, the mother of four, whether she had a vehicle, she replied she had a 1978 model Ford. When the judge asked if she was willing to sell the car to make restitution, she said she was not.

Pearce remanded her until today, "so that you can decide whether to sell the car or go to jail."

Telescope aids galactic find

What astronomers previously supposed was an eliptical galaxy in Ursa Major and given the name NGC 3928 is really what may be the smallest known spiral galaxy.

The photograph, taken by Mt. Mauna Kea observatory director Dr. Roger Cayrel, shows the object to be a miniature face-on spiral with bright blue core and well-defined spiral arms.

Van den Bergh said he and Cayrel had been looking at eliptical galaxies and expected something else when he examined the photos.

"It turned out to be a compact galaxy and was mis-entered as an eliptical galaxy. That's the advantage of having a bigger telescope," van den Bergh said.

"With these dimensions NGC 3928 is perhaps the smallest galaxy in a which well-defined spiral structure has ever been observed," he said in an abstract prepared by the observatory.

Its size he estimated at 2,000 light years diameter, compared with the earth's galaxy of 30,000 light years.

The director said his observation was not of great significance but was part of the systematic work of astrophysicists. It was unusual for something to have turned up so soon after the start of operations at Mauna Kea last fall.

Van den Bergh said most of the projects being undertaken there are of longer term, involving much laborious checking of detail.

Gov't facing huge newsprint suit: NDP

And Mackenzie NDP MLA Don Lockstead calculated that if the newspaper does sue, its claim will be about $10 million.

The contract with the Times, signed in 1978 and renewed in 1979 for another five years, involves a commitment of a minimum 10,000 tons of newsprint for every one of those five years, Barrett said.

But there will be no more newsprint coming out of Ocean Falls. The government closed down the paper mill this spring.

B.C. Cellulose head Ray Williston confirmed there is a possibility of a lawsuit but said he has only heard rumors so far.

"I don't think any lawsuit has been filed," Williston said Monday.

Afterwards he told reporters: "It's a bad business and this is supposed to be a government of businessmen. They've hurt our name in the international marketplace as suppliers."

The NDP leader said he had been in touch with a Mr. Niece, whom he identified as assistant general counsel for the Times.

He said Niece told him the paper would prefer not to sue and just wants its newsprint.

The NDP leader said, however, the newspaper wants the situation resolved quickly.

Barrett said when he suggested 90 days, Niece told him that was far too long to wait for a resolution.

The Times wants the government and the corporation to find an alternative source of newsprint and make up the difference between the contract price and the current high price in a tight market, he said.

Waterland told the legislature the responsibility for Ocean Falls Corp. belongs to Industry Minister Don Phillips.

The forest minister said his only involvement is to try to find a timber supply for the small chip operation the government wants to establish in Ocean Falls to replace the paper mill.

Barrett agreed the responsibility is Phillips'.

"The bungling is laid at the doorstep of the master bungler. He tried to sell the Los Angeles Times a used car. He rolled back the newsprintodometer."

But he refused to let Waterland off the hook.

Barrett argued that Waterland must have advised Williston before the contract was signed whether the mill had enough wood supply to carry out its part of the contract.

Phillips said he is aware of the problem and said it will be resolved in due course.

The industry minister told reporters he doesn't expect a lawsuit.

"We'll be able to negotiate with them. It's no major problem."

Lockstead, whose riding includes Ocean Falls, said at the current price of $525 a ton for newsprint, he expects the Times to sue the corporation and/or the government for $10 million.

"On that basis alone, it may have been better if Ocean Falls Corp. had spent the money on modernizing the newsprint mill. Besides saving jobs we would have been further ahead financially as well," Lockstead said.

Fewer cars come

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tourist automobile traffic is declining in B.C., Tourism Minister Pat Jordan said today.

Twenty years ago 77 per cent of people visiting the province travelled by car but now that figure is 50 per cent, she said.

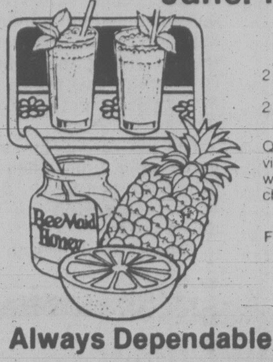
June: ICY FRUIT FROST

A Whiz of a Fizz



2/3 cup chilled unsweetened grapefruit juice
2/3 cup Bee Maid Honey
3/4 cup chilled, unsweetened pineapple juice
1 cup finely crushed ice

Quickly whirl all ingredients in blender until mixture is frothy. Or, vigorously beat until foamy. Serve in chilled glasses. Garnish with fresh mint, pineapple spears, or stemmed maraschino cherries. Makes six 4-ounce servings.

Always Dependable Quality BeeMaid

Red Shield hits 93% of target

The Red Shield Appeal has raised $250,000, 93 per cent of its target.

Campaign director Capt. Bill Merritt says this is considerably more than raised by this stage of the campaign in 1979.

The business and professional divisions have not yet reached their objectives and canvassers will continue working for the next few days. The professional division is expected to go over the top as in previous years.

Those who have not yet contributed can mail donations to 769 Pandora Avenue, Victoria, V8W 1N9.

Y planning tourist child care

The Victoria YM-YWCA will operate a child-minding service for tourists beginning June 30.

The program will be open to boys and girls from 6 to 11 years of age and will run three days a week until Aug. 22.

The program is a pilot project designed to meet the increasing demand for such a service. Tourists needing a one-day child-minding service have had to be turned away in increasing numbers during the past few years.

The children will be taken on field trips to parks and other attractions, play games, do crafts, swim and enjoy film shows.

Summer school university students will be hired as counsellors.

Gail Miller, the Y's youth director, is in charge of the new program. She says the program has been well received by the tourist industry and she hopes to get support from the industry through referrals, publicity and suggestions.

If your margarine isn't made with 100% pure corn oil, just what is it made of?

There are lots of ways to make many of the margarines you can buy today: just play mix and match with rapeseed oil, soya oil, palm oil and the various other vegetable oils that are available. But there's only one way to make Fleischmann's. With 100% pure corn oil.

Pure corn oil is what makes Fleischmann's taste so good. No mix-and-match margarine can match Fleischmann's for flavour. And pure corn oil is what makes Fleischmann's so important to people who are concerned about what they eat: more people who eat carefully choose Fleischmann's than any other margarine in Canada.

Sensible foods like Fleischmann's are an important part of a well-balanced diet. And a well-balanced diet is integral to the overall programme for good health that more and more doctors are recommending for their patients. Because a sensible programme of activity, fresh air and good eating habits, developed today, can help reduce the risk of health problems tomorrow.

Fleischmann's believes you're never too old… or too young …to make a better health programme part of your life.

As the first step toward developing a programme of your own, care enough about what you eat to find out what your margarine is made of. If it isn't 100% corn oil, it may not be the best margarine for you.

Housing: Bennett raps feds

Premier Bennett Monday attacked the federal government for failing to solve two major housing problems — the rental shortage and high interest rates.

He told a B.C. Real Estate Association convention at The Empress:

"Artificially high interest rates, and we still have them despite recent drops, are really nothing other than the federal government's way of punishing Canadians for its own shortcomings.

"It's a little like the father who goes out and gets drunk and then comes home and beats up the family."

Either through bad management or neglect Ottawa has not made funds available to help the industry.

By contrast, he said, the provincial government has budgeted carefully and was able to put $200 million of surplus funds into a plan to subsidize mortgages for low-income families.

Bennett said the province is pushing to have Ottawa reintroduce rental housing incentives through a 10-per-cent capital cost allowance.

He also wants to see the reactivation of the multiple unit residential building program which provided tax benefits for constructing apartment units.

The statement drew prolonged applause from the 500 delegates attending a luncheon meeting.

The premier described the B.C. economy as vigorous and noted the province has recently been granted a triple A rating, the highest in North America, by Moody's Investors Services of New York.

The top rating, he said, came at a time when 89 other governments and businesses suffered a reduced rating.

"The rate of growth of real gross provincial product for B.C. in 1980 will be double or triple the Canadian rate," he said.

Bennett housing starts in B.C. during March totalled more than the combined starts in seven provinces: Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

This year, he said, capital expenditures are expected to increase 17.7 per cent, the highest rate of increase of all Canadian provinces.

Bennett said the province will make additional Crown land available to private enterprise for housing and farms.

This program is already under way.

But the premier said he was not satisfied with the speed of the program and said it would be escalated.

Crown land suitable for farming should be sold to private enterprise as quickly as possible either as new units or by adding them to existing farms.

Additional Crown land must be made available for housing.

He said the government's policy will be to encourage private enterprise to develop land for residential use, rather than playing a direct role itself.

In other convention business, Realty Owners of Canada president R.L. Richards of Vancouver said his group will actively press the federal government to make a number of changes affecting the real estate industry, including restoration of capital cost allowances and permitting Canadians to use real estate holdings in their registered retirement savings plans.

Mair mum on MDs' demands

Health Minister Rafe Mair has no comment on the report that B.C. doctors want a 40-per-cent fee increase.

The minister said Monday the government's negotiations with the B.C. Medical Association on a new fee schedule don't start until fall.

"The doctors and the public would not think much of a health minister who responded to each and every comment made by the medical profession."

"I reserve my comment until we get into the negotiation room."

However, he was not reticent in denying a charge by NDP health critic Dennis Cocke that the government has been using health funds for other purposes.

Cocke told the BCMA annual convention in Vancouver that the government diverts about a quarter of a billion dollars a year in federal funds intended for health care into other areas.

"Absolute rubbish," Mair said.

The minister said every penny the federal government earmarks for health goes for health.

"It would be ridiculous to assume the federal government would allow us to siphon off any amount of money from the shared-cost programs for other programs," he said.

Two-Princess service still beaten by Maggie

No matter whose figures you use, the two-Princess service between Victoria and Seattle has not proven as popular as the old Princess Marguerite.

NDP MLA Bob Skelly (Alberni) said Monday the number of passengers carried by the Victoria Princess and the Flying Princess together, from May 16-31, was 10,598 — 5,225 fewer than the number carried by the Maggie in the same period last year.

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser issued figures for the same 16-day period which don't jibe with Skelly's but do show the new service trailing the Marguerite.

Fraser said the Victoria Princess carried about 7,200 passengers and the Flying Princess 3,250 for a total of 10,450.

According to his calculations, that is about 3,000 fewer passengers than were carried by the Marguerite in the same period last year.

Fraser said he didn't want to get into a numbers game and it isn't entirely fair to make comparisons after only two weeks of service.

Nevertheless, he said, "we are quite pleased with the very apparent acceptance of the new service during this shakedown period."

Skelly saw it differently. The trend shows, he said, that despite an expensive refit and an expensive advertising program, the government's decision to retire the Marguerite means a loss of tourists and tourist revenue for Victoria.

Fraser said despite the drop in numbers, the new service has a much greater economic impact on the Victoria area as travellers now have the opportunity to remain in the area much longer.

The previous service allowed day trippers to spend only about four hours in Victoria while the new schedule provides up to 10 hours in Victoria, he said.

Expo '76 investigation lays it all on Drapeau

QUEBEC (CP) — A Quebec government commission of inquiry has laid the blame for the $1 billion deficit of the 1976 Summer Olympic Games squarely on the doorstep of Montreal mayor Jean Drapeau.

Drapeau lacked the "necessary aptitude and competence" to be chief organizer of the Games and operated a one-man show for too long, says the commission headed by Superior Court Justice Albert Malouf.

The Canadian Press obtained a copy of an 88-page summary of the commission's report Monday. The full report, said to be more than 1,000 pages long and contain numerous recommendations, has been submitted to the Quebec cabinet and is to be made public later this week.

Drapeau was guilty of "irresponsibility" in abandoning his promise to present "modest games," the Malouf report summary said.

The commission said organizers failed to start with a complete budget, allowing the imagination of Paris architect Roger Taillibert, designer of the Olympic Park, to run free in a context where "no cost limit had been set."

Professional management only began to arrive in 1974, when a full-time co-ordinator of sports installations was named, it added. The Olympic Village, where athletes were housed, did not get a construction overseer until 1975.

Control was in Drapeau's hands until that time, the commission said.

Many Olympic installations were described as "superfluous and uselessly luxurious."

The $75-million Velodrome was called an "extravagant creation," ill-suited to later needs, while a viaduct built to offer motorists a spectacular view of the park was termed an "extravagance."

Also judged wasteful were the Olympic rowing basin, built for $25 million, and the Etienne Desmarteau Centre, renovated at a cost of $11.6 million to serve as a venue for basketball and training.

Indian self-government two years away: Munro

VANCOUVER (CP) — Native Indians will have self-government within two years, says federal Indian Affairs Minister John Munro.

And the minister supports the rights of Indians to handle conservation and policing of native fisheries.

Only the slow process of parliamentary change stands between Indians and their right to govern their own affairs, Munro said at a news conference Saturday.

"It depends on how soon we can finish the consultation period and how soon an Indian government bill can be introduced in the Commons," he said.

"If the process works, it could be done in the next year or year and a half."

The legislation would give band councils the power to levy taxes and control their own economic development, housing and education, Munro said. But he added that native Indians would not be forced into self-government if they do not feel ready for it.

"There are some bands that have indicated to me that they may not prefer to opt into Indian government," he said. Such bands would continue under the terms of the present Indian Act.

Changing to self-government would give the bands access to money saved by reducing the number of Indian affairs staff, Munro said.

He said he currently is involved in discussions about band councils' rights to pass bylaws to control fishing on band lands.

Miners given up for dead

VAL D'Or, Que. (CP) — Three of the eight miners trapped 14 days ago in a cave-in at the Belmoral gold mine here were officially given up for dead Monday.

Don Lavigne, the mine manager, said "there is no chance at all" that two men working together in one section at the time of the accident will be found alive.

Other workers continue the back-breaking task of clearing an area above an air pocket where the five other men could have sought refuge.

Imports $7M over exports

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada exported $7 million less than it imported in merchandise during April, Statistics Canada said today.

Exports were $6.164 billion while imports totalled $6.171 billion.

In March, there was a trade surplus of $649 million and in February, one of $792 million.

All figures are adjusted to smooth seasonal variations, the largest of which occurs in the auto industry which traditionally shuts down to retool during August.

Exports fell 3.1 per cent, or just under $200 million, largely because of declines in fabricated and finished products. The largest falls in value were for non-ferrous metals, passenger cars, aircraft and other transportation equipment, lumber and chemicals.

The main weakness in finished products were passenger car exports which decreased 25 per cent to $270 million and a drop of 23 per cent in exports of aircraft and other transportation equipment to $200 million.

Falling demand for farm equipment, caused by the recession in the United States, together with the U.S. wheat embargo against the Soviet Union, resulted in a six-per-cent drop in exports in April, following a seven-per-cent decrease in March.

Oil and coal exports increased 40 per cent.

The monthly trade report, with preliminary figures subject to revisions when more up-to-date information is available, says an increase in crude oil imports of almost $100 million to $710 million was the main culprit for the rise in imports.

A message of importance to our customers and employees about your right to shop and work at Woodward's

Woodward's has offered its Victoria food floor employees the same wages and benefits their union recently negotiated with the supermarket chains. But the union wants the best of both worlds, the best of the Woodward compensation package and the best of the union contract with the chains. If we agree to these demands, Woodward's food operations in Victoria will become non-competitive. Our costs of doing business will be much higher than the costs faced by our competitors. Why is this international union demanding more of a Western Canadian company than the agreement they have with the international conglomerates in the food business? In order for us to stay in business, we need your support.

Please remember that customers and employees have the right to shop and work at Woodward's.

Moviegoers in Coventry, England were reaching for their handkerchiefs as Rhett Butler was walking out on Scarlett O'Hara in the 228th and final minute of Gone With The Wind. Suddenly, the screen went blank — the projector had broken down. Enter Alan Taylor and Linda Burke. Taylor, 24, assistant manager at Coventry's ABC Cinema, and Burke, 23, an ice cream saleswoman, acted out the final scene live on stage. The impromptu actors didn't quite match Clark Gable and Vivien Leigh: "Oh Rheff. What am I going to do if you leave me?" "The name is Rhett . . . Frankly, I don't give a damn."

Retired X-rated actress Linda Lovelace wants the projectors turned off. She joined feminists in New York calling for theatre owners to stop showing Deep Throat — the porn movie in which she starred. Among demonstrators were actress Valerie Harper and feminist Susan Brownmiller. "The filming of Deep Throat was the most degrading and terrifying time of my life," Lovelace said. "I was beaten and sexually abused on a daily basis, before, during, and after the film," said Lovelace, 31, now homemaker Linda Marciano.

DES director William Jamieson said the agency would not go along with the request. The Klan's request was listed in the DES monthly job report, and a job-services employee told the newspaper the listing was in the job bank, offering $3.90 to $4.25 hourly.

Under his commencement gown at Bucknell University, Davis Johnson accepted his bachelor's degree wearing an unusual T-shirt: "Bucknell Class of 1980," it said on the back. But on the front: "Class of 1930." Johnson, 74, had re-enrolled at the Lewisburg, Pa., school last spring, hoping to complete the four credits he lacked toward a degree when he dropped out of college during the Depression. "It's something that had bothered me for 50 years," he said. Last spring, after doctors told him a heart problem meant he had "maybe two more good years," he went into action. Using a library near his home, he wrote a paper on Simon Bolivar that provided the credits.

Dear Abby:

This letter is written in response to the woman whose ignorance concerning the limitations of persons with spinal cord injuries is all too common. This lack of understanding can be a far greater hardship to a person with such an impairment than the impairment itself.

There is now way to undo generations of misinformation in one letter, but I will try: The easiest way is simply to list some of the things a paraplegic (one with lower body paralysis) can do, with proper equipment and-or assistance:

Work, play, marry, divorce, love, be loved, have sex, become a parent, raise children, keep house, drive a vehicle, shop, attend school, church and engage in sports. I could fill your column with more, but I think you get the general idea.

Of course, each situation is different, depending on the extent of injury, motivation, environmental barriers, attitudinal barriers and other factors. But then we're all different, aren't we? Some of us able-bodied people do very little with our lives while others accomplish a great deal. The same applies to persons with physical disabilities. Let's not be barriers ourselves.

Joe Butler

Dear Abby:

I am a 15-year-old girl. I know lots of boys as friends but have never had a real boyfriend. To be perfectly truthful about, I have liked several boys a lot, and one in particular was on my mind night and day. He never paid any attention to me so I just went on dreaming about him, but nothing ever came of it.

Now for my problem. There is a rumor going around school that I got pregnant and had an abortion last summer. Abby, it is a lie. I never even had the chance to get pregnant, so I don't know where this rumor got started. How can I prove it?

Lied About

Dear Lied:

Trying to prove that a rumor is not true is like trying to put toothpaste back into the tube. Just behave in a manner that will make those who spread those rumors look like liars.

Dear Abby:

My husband and I attended a wedding reception a month ago. The bride is the daughter of friends.

My question: Is a wedding considered a social obligation — or a thing apart?

We entertained the parents of the bride at a dinner party two months before the wedding, but we aren't sure if we now owe them, or if they should make the next move, socially. Please advise.

Not Sure

Dear Not:

Since the parents of the bride were your guests last at a dinner party, they now owe you a similar invitation. Even though their daughter's wedding was elegant, it cannot be considered repayment.

Altar giving altered

By ANNE SCHIRO
New York Times

Their mothers may have thought it was essential to start married life with complete sets of silver, crystal and china, but the brides of 1980 often have other priorities.

"For our lifestyle, crystal service for 12 is less important than graduate school for two," said Nancy Schwartzman, a 22-year-old law student. She will be married in July to Walter Malmquist, an Olympic skier who is just finishing his undergraduate studies at Dartmouth.

"We don't feel we need fine china and crystal right now," said 24-year-old Karen Di Valentino, a translator who recently married Michael McGown, who is with the American Can Company in Greenwich, Conn. "He won't be bringing the boss home for dinner just yet."

"Working, I don't have time to plan a big dinner party," said Susan Levine, a corporate insurance analyst for Avon Products. "So I don't feel I need fine china or crystal — and besides, I'd get a big lump in my throat if someone dropped it."

Melissa Manno summed up the feelings of many brides when she said: "Young people aren't living in a style today where it's essential to have complete silver, crystal and china. People prefer to spend money pulling a home together to make a nice internal environment rather than spending money on one set of silver."

Manno, who was married May 10 to Maurice Clement Hakim, a 31-year-old tea importer, added: "We're putting a lot of emphasis on the kitchen and things for entertaining, such as a butler's buffet on wheels, a two-pot coffee maker, a food processor."

In years gone by, young people often lived with their parents until their weddings and consequently didn't have so much as a teaspoon to start out with. They depended on wedding gifts to provide the necessities. Today, many couples have had their own apartments or have lived together and acquired a lot of the basics.

As a consequence, the gifts that brides are asking for sometimes seem unconventional to their older relatives. Di Valentino would be thrilled, she said, if all her friends got together and bought a stereo.

"My parents have offered us a microwave oven, and his are giving us a good camera," she said.

Karen Kraft, a rock singer, will be married this coming Saturday, June 7 to John Meli, who is earning a degree in structural engineering. She hopes people will give them "beautiful things we'll always remember, rather than anything patently useful."

"I was married before," Kraft said, "and had all matching stuff. My former husband took half of everything, so now I have a lot of things that don't match. But it doesn't matter. Both John and I are really good cooks, and we think ingredients are more important than equipment. Besides, we have a postage-stamp kitchen — there's no room for a Cuisinart even if we wanted one."

Both Marcia Boles and her fiance, Francesco Cantarella, a public affairs consultant, have maintained separate households before, so their problem is that they have too much already.

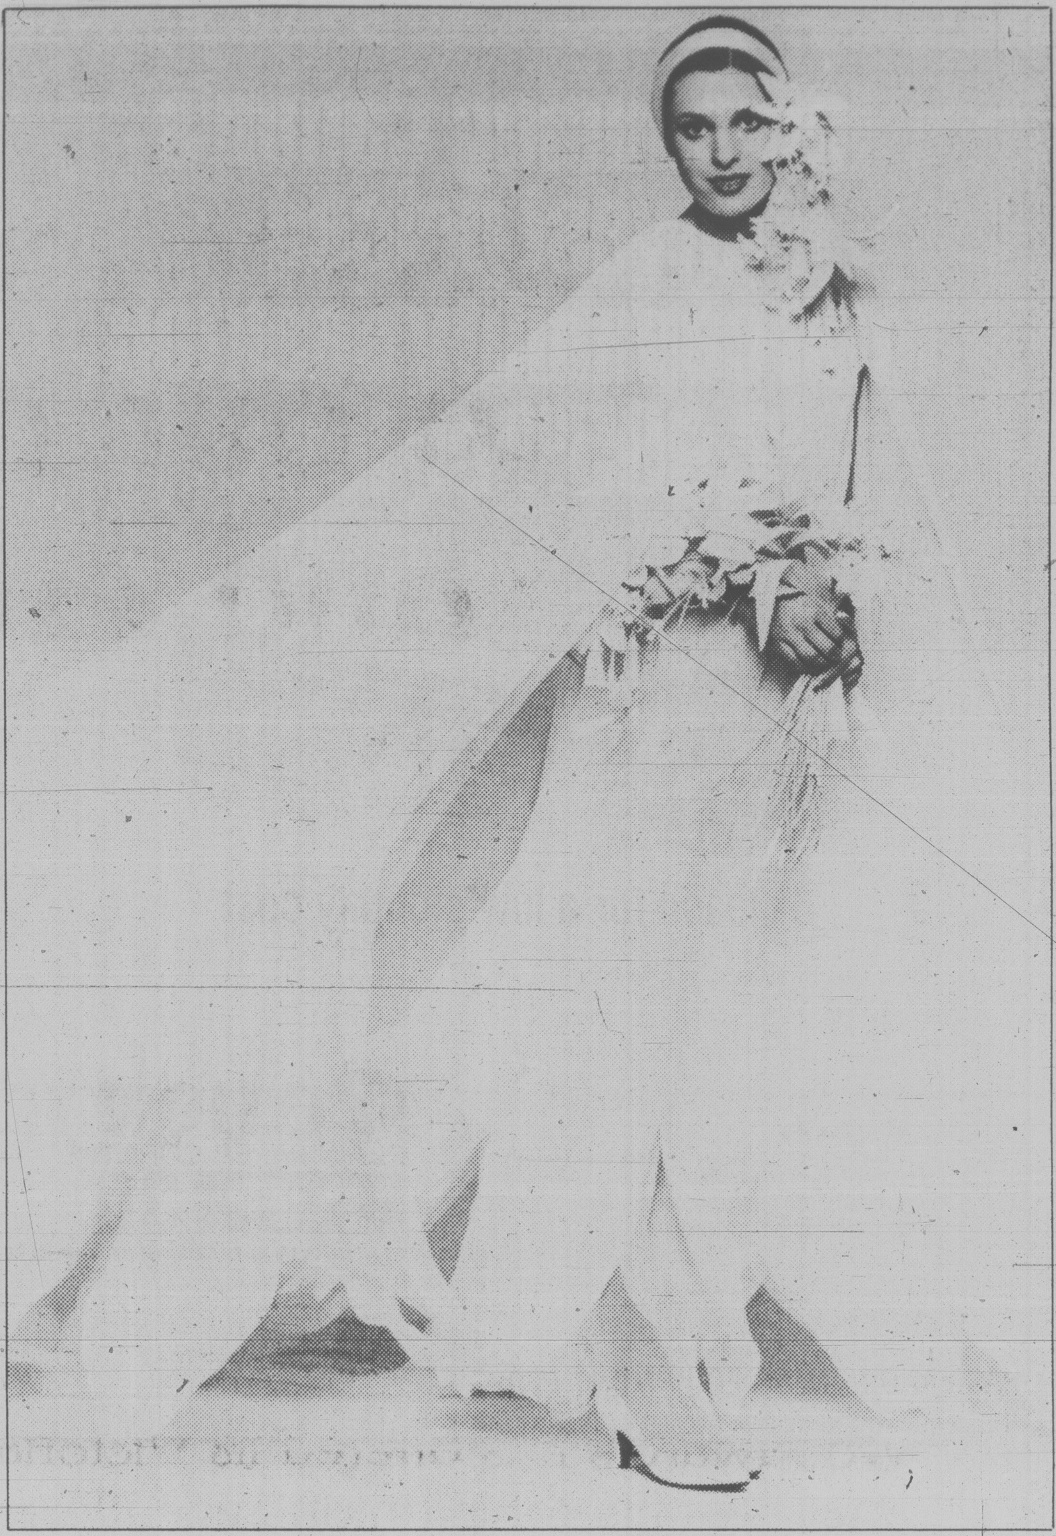
"What we hope is that people will give us flowers to go in all the vases we've accumulated and cheese to put on all those silver trays we got the first time around."

But there are modern brides with very traditional attitudes, who choose silver and fine china patterns and register their choices in stores.

"The prices of china, silver and crystal have gone so high," said Anne Keating, director of bridal and gift services at Bloomingdale's, "that brides don't expect to get a place setting from one person. In the last six months, the average gift has risen from $50 to between $80 and $100, but a place setting of china can cost $125 — and silver is much more than that."

"China and silver are priorities," said Donna Manheim, who married Leslie Reif last weekend. "Leslie's aunt offered to give us crystal and my grandmother said she'll give us china. Leslie's uncle asked if we'd rather have a piece of art or silver. We said silver."

As Manheim put it: "There's a difference in the kind of gifts you can expect from relatives and what you can expect from friends your own age. We've agreed with our friends to keep gifts to a bare minimum. They'll probably give us pots and bowls and things like that."



NO SINGLE period in history is reflected in this year's trends of bridal attire, but, say industry spokesmen, there is a return to the traditional look with lace, embroidery and cathedral trains.

Village wedding laced with fog and frolicking

By GEORGE BUTTERS
Canadian Press

Last Saturday morning was foggy and overcast in D'Escoussé, an Acadian village here on Nova Scotia's Isle Madame, but the spirits that watch over such things in Cape Breton brought out the sunshine for the wedding of author Silver Donald Cameron and his bride Louise Terrio, a native of the village.

Before turning his hand to fiction, Cameron was best known for his articles about Cape Breton and the people who live here. On hand for the wedding were such notables as author Farley Mowat, who lives across the way at Riviere Bourgeois, and Harry Bruce, editor of Atlantic Insight.

Mowat delivered the toast to the bride in what was described as a fine unprincipled fashion. Alma Lee, former executive-director of the Writers Union of Canada, delivered the toast to the groom.

Cameron's interest in the sea is more than a passing fancy. It is evident in everything he does.

In a shed behind his home is the nearly-finished hull of a nine-metre cutter intended, he says, for ocean cruising.

However, Mowat was of the opinion that Cameron's voyage might be the first-ever ocean cruise to go no farther than the Bras D'Or lakes.

And instead of the traditional bride and groom figurines, the wedding cake was adorned with a replica of the boat.

The Camerons slipped away from the revelling guests for an overnight honeymoon but planned to return to a party that was sure to go on for days.

"If there's anyone sober by midnight on the north of Isle Madame," said the groom, "we're going to feel offended."

While a small crowd of about 40 turned up for the wedding at the home of the Terrios, hundreds were expected to pass through the reception, which was well stocked with the necessary supplies for a Cape Breton get together.

Although it appeared that John Allan Cameron, Cape Breton entertainer and favorite native son, was not going to arrive, there were plenty of fiddlers and other players to keep things moving.

Hiatus hernia needn't lead to surgery

By Dr. L.L. COLEMAN

My doctor has just found out that I have a hiatus hernia. I am overweight by 60 lbs. If I need an operation, will weight be a handicap?

Mrs. M.H.

Dear Mrs. H.:

Your letter is confusing. You are jumping the gun with the possibility that surgery may be necessary. There probably will not be any need for this.

I will give you some comprehension of just what a hiatus hernia is. When once you understand it, you will realize that — with sensible diet and loss of weight — you probably will keep the condition under complete control.

A hiatus hernia is a weakness of the wall of the esophagus, which is the tube through which food passes from the mouth to the stomach. The esophagus passes through an opening in the diaphragm as it joins up with the stomach. Sometimes this opening becomes enlarged and a small portion of the stomach is pulled up into the diaphragmatic opening. Although the terms are slightly different, "hiatus" hernia and "diaphragmatic" hernia are sometimes used interchangeably.

Many people who have had vague symptoms of heartburn, fullness and bloating are found to have a small hiatus hernia that may have been overlooked. The symptoms may often resemble those of ulcer of the stomach and duodenum, and even gallbladder disease.

Routine X-rays reveal the presence of a hiatus hernia. It is found especially in middle-aged, overweight people. Usually a sensible diet and anti-spasm drugs can modify and control the symptoms. One of the key treatments of this condition is the taking of smaller quantities of food at more frequent intervals, rather than overloading the stomach at one meal.

Tobacco, alcohol and spices should be markedly limited. Weight reduction is most important.

Dear Doctor:

Miss N.R.

Dear Miss R.:

When blood is taken from the vein it is poured into a special thin glass tube. The speed with which the red blood cells settle to the bottom is known as the "sedimentation rate."

In the presence of infections and certain other conditions, the "sed rate" is increased — that is, the red blood cells fall more rapidly when infections are present in the body. Repeated "sed rates" are done, as a guide to how well the infection is being controlled.

Vancouver dream spurs runner

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — Terry Fox, of Coquitlam, who has been running to raise money for cancer research since April 14, says "I often think about the day I'll reach Vancouver and I also keep telling myself that I can never give up."

Terry made the comment while resting here during his cross-Canada run from St. John's, Nfld., to Vancouver to raise $1 million for the Canadian Cancer Society.

With his right leg amputated above the knee, he has worn out three artificial legs on the 2,000 kilometres he has covered so far.

He hopes to arrive in Vancouver in November and Doug Alward, who is accompanying him, believes he will succeed. "I think he's holding up pretty good," Alward said Sunday.

By RENA PAUL

Dear Rena:

I am having problems with my very fair, freckled, dry skin — especially on my fave and ear lobes. I seldom use soap, always use a moisturizer under my makeup and use a night cream. My skin is being treated for Solar Keratosis now, but I'll soon need some help for a good skin care regime: I also need to use a sun-screen. Can you suggest a good one? Do I wear it under my moisturizer or on top of my makeup? Thank you for any help you can give me.

Almost Desperate

Dear Almost Desperate:

Solar Keratosis occurs as a result of sun damage to the skin. Although there are several methods for correcting this ailment, the fat that you are susceptible to skin damage of this nature means you must take extra precaution!

Definitely ask your dermatologist to prescribe a "custom-blend" sunscreen for you, one high in PABA concentration. You need a sun-screen that works as close to a "total block" as you can get. Wear it directly on the face not on top of your makeup. Sunscreen lotions function very much like moisturizers, so depending on the quality of the lotion prescribed to you, you may not need a moisturizer.

With your fair skin, don't forget to apply the sunscreen to all exposed areas of the body such as your ear lobes, fingers and feet. Sun lotion should not be oily or greasy — the oil merely helps to fry your skin to a crisp!

Also, check the products you are already using with your dotor. Make sure they are compatible with your skin type. There are some high quality, fragrance-free brands on the market which come in formulations for three skin types — dry, oily and normal. Once your dermatologist has notified you of any particular ingredient or product which you should stay away from, I will be moe than happy to outlie a good skin-care beauty routine for you.

FRECKLED FACES — like these two winners of Saskatoon's annual kids' Freckleface Contest — are more prone to burning by summer sun in areas not covered by "freckles" of skin pigment.

Dear Rena:

I had my ears pierced three years ago and have discovered that some earrings cause my ears to swell up and become sore, and sometimes even infected. I would have thought that all earrings on the market would have been tested for wearability.

Sharon T.

Dear Sharon:

Ear lobes vary in sensitivity. Some people seem to be able to dangle army bots from them, while others are limited to 24k gold posts! Gold, silver and surgical steel are definitely your best bet as far as finding metals that are least irritating to your ear. You might also try a lighter weight earring. Clean your lobes and your earrings with rubbing alcohol before inserting the post in your ear. This procedure should minimize infection. If you have not worn your earrings for a while, don't attempt to re-pierce them with the post. See a specialist if this is your problem.

Please send your questions to Rena Paul c/o Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4. All queries will be answered confidentially; if stamped, self-addressed invelope is included.

Baby feeding bottle has detailed history

the collectors

By KEN RICHARDSON

This collectable has a long history. In point of fact, as long ago as 1900 B.C. feeding bottles were being turned out in fair quantity. Those from ancient Egypt are rare but number of Greek and Roman specimens have been found in archeological digs; one such looks rather like a miniature pottery teapots, complete with handle and spout.

Fortunately, it was a common practice in those days to bury the bottle with the baby and this practice reveals a lot as to how babies were nourished.

The Romans are credited with the use of the first glass feeding bottles but later they adopted rough Samian ware.

The bottles disappeared from the scene from 400 to 1500, to surface again the time of Elizabeth I in the shape of a leather receptacle somwhat like an upright bottle with a vertical spout.

Wooden bottles were also popular about that time. Then, flask-shaped pewter affairs sporting small nipples. Pewter stayed around for the best part of 200 years and assumed various forms, like salt pots with screw tops and straight nipples or round and flat bottomed flasks with screw-on tops and nipples.

In 1777 the "bubby pot," somewhat like a gravy boat, was the first attempt to create a radically new design. Wedgwood fashioned then as part of his "Queen Ware" pieces.

As time went by, design swung between the traditional and the boat shape.

From 1900 the popular style has been the single-ended "gondola" shaped glass feeding bottles, with measurement gradings on the sides.

Bottles made prior to 1900 are difficult to obtain and prices are high or unusual shapes.

Membership in a bottle club can be most helpful since you are there likely to meet or learn about possible sources in the locality. Interest in this collectable is developing space and, as a result, more of all types will come to light.

Prices are far from stabilized but some examples will serve as a guide: Clear, embossed bottle $18; flask shape oval, embossed and showing ounces and scale, $16; 8-oz. "Happy Baby" bottle, $6.50.

No this, no that, no truth

OTTAWA (CP) — Most of the myths about how large people should dress have been started by small people, says Ken Gartz, manager of George Richards Kingsize Clothes in Ottawa.

He said small people are sometimes inclined to be insecure and have vented some of their frustrations by denying their larger brothers a certain segment of fashion.

Once perpetrated, the myths have grown with the years. No bright colors, no vertical stripes, no this and no that.

Nonsense, said Gartz. The most important thing for a large person to keep in mind when buying clothes is fit.

"It's practically the only thing," he said. "All this about checks and vertical stripes. . . . Put a man who's six foot two inches in a vertically striped suit and he's still six foot two.

"It's of minimal importance. But when a man with a 46-inch waist wears 40-inch pants, then his stomach is going to look big. It's a matter of vanity; it's the same with women."

As for colors, Gartz said it's personality, not size, that is the determining factor.

People who feel good about themselves may enjoy wearing clothes that attract attention, he said. They don't want something that will play down their presence.

On the other hand, someone of a self-effacing nature may be happier in a quiet navy blue suit, he said.

"But we have been bombarded with myths, and this makes it very difficult to sell high-fashion merchandise to larger people."

MOTHER OF THE BRIDE wears French crepe shirtmaker gown by Teteve Rosen. The gown, in a soft rose, has a slight blouson with a defined waist, raglan sleeves and a four-gored skirt.

Shower alive, well

VANCOUVER (CP) — No, they haven't gone the way of the dodo. Bridal showers are still extremely popular with the wedding set.

But they have changed from the traditional tea parties where dainty sandwiches and sweets were customary fare.

Gone also are the games that had been associated with the occasion.

But the tradition of making a headpiece from the ribbons and bows is still going strong, say wedding specialists.

The hostess supplies the paper plate or napkin and tape to fasten the bows on to the hat and the ribbons are tied under the chin.

Showers can be given by close friends of the bride with the bridal attendants and the mothers of the bride and groom as special guests.

Although some people may disagree, it is a generally accepted rule that relatives don't give showers. They can have a family gathering restricted to relatives.

In this case, guests are not expected to bring gifts but the hostess may provide a corsage.

Food can be elaborate or simple depending on the time you have to spend. An easy party can be held in the afternoon with a selection of cheese, crackers, pickles, sweets and beverages.

Wine is becoming increasingly popular at such functions and fruit punches are also a good choice.

MOSCOW (AP) — Mary Bradford, 23, left her home in Downey, Calif. for Moscow last year to take up a summer job in the Soviet capital. Marrying a Russian, she says, was "the farthest thing from my mind."

But on June 10, the teacher's aide will marry Sergei Lazutin, a Soviet film cameraman she met in July. She will join a growing number of Americans taking Russian spouses — often with surprisingly little bureaucratic trouble.

"When we walked into the Soviet wedding registration office speaking English, every conversation stopped and the people waiting all stared at us," Bradford said in an interview. "But the officials working there took it all in stride."

Bureaucratic co-operation has not always been available.

If you knew Susie like they knew . . .

ELDRIDGE, Iowa (AP) — If you knew Susie like they know Susie around Eldridge, then you'd know that Sue Bader is married to Gary Bader. And Rick Bader. And Susie will soon marry Lance Bader, although Susie is his mother.

If that sounds like bigamy, or the end-all of marital mixups, it's nothing of the sort.

But two of the four Bader brothers have taken brides named Sue, and a third will soon marry a girl named — well, you guessed it already.

Compounding the confusion is the fact that the three younger Mrs. Sue Baders will share a mother-in-law: Mrs. Sue Bader, wife of Jim.

Gary Bader started the confusion by marring Sue, a girl he met in high school. Brother Rick, the next oldest, married another Sue, whom he met at a horse show conducted by Gary and Sue Bader.

Mark Bader is the only brother to break tradition and marry a non-Sue. But he is divorced and his brother and sisters-in-law are putting some good-natured pressure on him to find a Sue, too.

"It was confusing enough when there was just me and my mother-in-law," said Mrs. Gary Bader. "But now, it's chaos. All of us have the same doctors and dentists and they get the cards they send out as reminders of checkups mixed up. Sometimes we all wind up together in the doctor's or dentist's office. None of us is sure which one they really wanted."

Each Bader family operates its own business, but the correspondence for the various businesses is constantly getting mixed up.

"If we call and ask which Bader they wanted, they'll say, 'The one that's married to Sue,' and we're right back where we started," Mrs. Gary Bader said.

IF YOU'RE OVERWEIGHT:

"Just a few short months ago I walked through the doors of Weight Loss Clinic. Now seventy pounds lighter and much happier my friends hardly recognize me!"
Judy Alman

If you were to see Judy today you'd probably never guess she was ever overweight. But when she first came to Weight Loss Clinic she was "absolutely desperate for help".

Our staff of experienced nurses and nutrition counselors provided the support and guidance she needed to reach her remarkable goal, without drugs, fad diets or boring exercises. And by using the skills she's learned Judy knows she won't gain back the weight she's so proud of having lost.

Weight Loss Clinic. If Judy can do it, so can you. Call now and set-up a free consultation visit.

Dear Dr. Levine: I am a 17-year-old girl who can't seem to recover from a relationship with a man I met in Australia two years ago when I accompanied my father on a business trip.

Although we knew each other for only two weeks, we were devoted. I have dated boys since, but it never works out, because I can't forget this man, although I know there's no way we'll see each other again.

There were letters — there still are — but they pile up and accomplish nothing.

Answer: I understand how much you miss him, and because of the letters, I assume he misses you. But I'm not sure I can be a lot of help.

Two years is a long time to carry a torch without any new fuel added. But my major concerns have to do with other factors.

Namely, you were only 15 at the time and the entire relationship lasted only two weeks.

We all can build in our fantasy lives a perfect world. It is possible that the man you still care for has been painted in such an ideal fashion you have forgotten or never knew his faults.

I would never go so far as to say nothing could come of all this. But only time will tell. Meanwhile, be open to new experiences, interests and people. Don't stunt yourself.

Dear Mr. Vichert: There has been a considerable amount of tension between my father and me over the past few years and the situation doesn't seem to be improving. Many of my small habits are very irritating to him, and vice versa. I can't even share the paper with him if he is there reading it first. It gets to the point where I can't do anything with him, and we can't even communicate on a friendly basis any more. Our relationship just can't go on this way. Please don't suggest counselling, he is too stubborn.

Answer: In order to solve a problem, you first have to be able to define what the problem is. What has created the tension? Are the causes of the tension something that you have some control over? Has your behaviour contributed, and if so can you change the behavior? Are you trying for too much attention, or at the wrong times? If your father works are you trying to get him to pay attention to you as soon as he comes home when he might be tired?

There are a lot of questions and trying to find the answers to some of these may be when some outside advice could be helpful. I can only suggest that you talk with your father and if nothing seems to work, reconsider seeking counselling. Even if your father won't go, it might offer some answers for you.

Dear Rev. Cotter: I am a 16-year-old girl and I consider myself to be very mature. My boyfriend, also 16, and I have been going out for some time now. We have a very stable and loving relationship. We have discussed having sex and I have agreed to go on the Pill. My parents are aware of our intention, and while they do not condone it, they feel we are doing the responsible thing.

We have not yet had intercourse. My question is, in the Christian faith, is premarital sex considered a sin? I realize it is considered morally wrong, but I don't feel it is a sin if love is a major factor.

Answer: It is interesting that you seem to distinguish between what is "morally wrong" and what is a "sin." By morally wrong, do you mean behavior that is socially frowned on, and by sin, behavior that offends God? It is an important distinction.

Many churches will give you a flat answer that pre-marital sex is sin. The Christian tradition puts great emphasis on consent and commitment between those who enter into a sexual relationship, and consent and commitment find their usual place in marriage. But marriage must prove itself to many young people today, who see it as a failure, so they make their own commitments outside of marriage and establish sexual relationships.

If what you are doing involves a sense of responsibility to each other, and of response to God, who, after all, invented sex and endowed us with it, then I do not think it must be sinful.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Roll-fighting role grows for medics

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Everyone from waitresses to actors, ditch-diggers to doctors, is having cosmetic surgery these days, says Dr. Jack Sheen of the School of Medicine at the University of California at Los Angeles.

"Anything gravity drags down we can lift up: behinds, bellies, backs of knees, breasts, chins, eyelids," Sheen said after a speech to the annual convention of the Canadian Society of Plastic Surgeons.

Emphasis on the importance of a youthful appearance prompts many people to turn to plastic surgery, he said in an interview.

"Some people come in every year or so for a few additional alterations, especially those whose appearance is vital to their profession."

Facelifts and operations on the breasts and abdomen tend to require repeated treatments, Sheen said, but not so with eyelids.

"Procedures for eyelids have been improved a great deal with new techniques that take less skin away and recreate the original contours of the lower lid. In the past, the lower lid has tended to look flat and strained after the operation."

Now, he said, incisions are made from ear to ear across the top of the head and skin is removed from the scalp as it is lifted.

New techniques have also been developed to enlarge breasts. The silicon prosthesis has been improved and the pockets around the silicon now are filled with an anti-bacterial foam so the breasts remain soft.

Nose operations have improved too.

"We're getting away from the surgical-looking nose to one that preserves the identity of the person. It's useless to put a cute little turned-up Irish nose on an Iranian, for example. Nose and face don't match."

They'll turn your feet to jelly

By RON ALEXANDER
New York Times

NEW YORK — They're called "jelly shoes," and if they'd been around when Charlie Chaplin made a meal of his boot in The Gold Rush, the little tramp would probably have selected them for dessert.

Made of glossy molded rubber, the shoes come in such shimmering shades as wine, grape, root beer and cherry red; for those who prefer to be more conservatively shod they're also available in white, blue, camel, brown and smoke.

Bert Geller, president of Andrew Geller, the shoe company that discovered a gold mine of its own last winter with pile-lined rubber cowboy boots, first spotted the four-eyelet oxford, in such serious hues as black and brown, on workmen and chambermaids in Greece. He borrowed a pair from a street cleaner ("So many stylish shoes had working-class origins," Geller says) and the restyled Greek shoes (now translucent as well as colorful and boasting a gauzelike cotton lining) are currently livening things up in both the men's ($22) and women's ($20) departments of such stores as Saks Fifth Avenue and Macy's.

In the Saks women's shoe department the other afternoon, Margaret Jordan bought the smoke-gray shoes because "they're perfect for washing the car," while Leah Margolies chose cherry "for my gardening." Another woman who couldn't decide between grape and blue finally chose both. "Perhaps I'll wear one of each and start a trend," she said. (Such a trend may already be afoot. Saks reports that the average sale of the jellies in women's sizes is three pairs to a customer. "One woman bought eight!" confided a rather flabbergasted clerk.)

At Macy's, one man hesitated, then decided on the cherry red because, he said, "If you're going to buy these things you may as well go all the way."

At Camouflage, a men's shop in Chelsea, Gene Chase, the owner, sold a pair of the reds to a man who boasted that he was going to wear them to a formal dinner party with his black tuxedo. Another customer, however, decided against the white shoes because "They make me feel like Nurse Ratched."

Thomas Leeds, who wore a pair (red) for three days in a row, said that they "got a little warm and pinched slightly now and then." The thing that bothered him most, though, were the people who kept asking, "When do you head back to Oz?"

But Barbara Baruzy, whose shoes are blue, said: "I love them. They're no hotter than sneakers and when it rains they're fabulous." Mrs. Baruzy does have one gripe: "They don't come in bright yellow."

A NEW LOOK for ceremonial occasions will be introduced at two of Canada's military colleges in September when female officer cadets will be admitted straight from high school for the first time. After 10 weeks of basic training at CFB Chilliwack, 18 cadets will go to the College Militaire Royal at Saint-Jean, Que., and another 32 will begin training at the Royal Military College in Kingston, Ont. Royal Roads Military College here will not have any women officer cadets this year but expects to admit them as the program progresses. The uniform for normal parades will be the same as the men. For the first time this year, under another program, women who have spent time in the ranks of the armed forces, mostly corporals, were admitted into Royal Roads College as officer cadets.

At least that's the theory behind the increasing use of babies in commercials. Sponsors aim their pitches straight at the viewer's heart-strings — hoping to reach the purse-strings as well.

"What we're doing is using . . . innocence to entertain, which hopefully makes the message more memorable," says Wayne Fenske, general manager of Rabko Television Productions, Toronto's largest commercial producer.

"It's instilling the same kind of emotion as when we use a couple in a romantic situation."

New Faces, a talent agency that concentrates on child clients, has 3,000 children registered and receives about 10 photographs of would-be infant celebrities every day.

"We really can't have too ethnic a look," says owner Joan Fisher. "People want the all-Canadian image so, unfortunately, we have to steer clear of the dark-complexioned."

Filmmaking of any kind is tedious but, for the most part, the children are treated decently. In fact, regulations established by the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists guard against abuse.

The association stipulates how long a child may stay under the lights without a break (15 minutes for those under two years old) and nurses must be on the set with infants less than six months old. Auditions, costume-fittings and photographic tests for school-age children must not conflict with their classes.

The children are well-paid. An eight-hour day on the set is worth $204.50 and residual payments range from $200 to $500 every 13 weeks.

by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Jack Nicholson, an elusive, mercurial figure on screen and off, is perhaps the most cerebral actor of them all when it comes to scrutinizing the mechanics and the mystique of performing.

At 44, Nicholson has produced, directed and written for the screen, collecting an Oscar in 1975 for best actor in One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest. He was nominated for three others — Easy Rider (1969), The Last Detail (1973) and Chinatown, 1974.

His new movie, The Shining, in which he was directed by controversial, and oft-proclaimed cinematic genius, Stanley Kubrick, may be the most bizarre of all Nicholson performances.

A relentless innovator, Nicholson plays the demented teacher-turned-caretaker of a magnificent mountain resort in an unorthodox style that brings to mind the performances of early silent film stars.

One of the best of the "natural" actors in the 1970s, Nicholson had few peers — save Dustin Hoffman, perhaps — at underplaying roles. In The Shining he pulls all the stops, dangerously experimenting with bravura, near operatic, acting techniques.

Press-shy Nicholson, who has never hired a publicist, surfaced this week to talk about The Shining, which he thinks is a landmark film, and his own experimentation with his role as a man growing progressively mad.

"Right now I am interested in larger-than-life performances," Nicholson said. "I'm well aware the standard of acting today is naturalistic and I suspect audiences are getting weary of it.

"I tried to be larger-than-life in Going South, which I also directed, and got some complaints about the sort of acting I was doing.

"What I'm attempting is difficult. It's easy to be real if that's your job. But I have a strong obligation to do something surrealistic without driving the audience out of the theatre.

"My job is believing what's happening in the script. If I do that, it won't be bad. Unpredictability is the nervous system of the dramatic art. The real fun is doing a great day's work, even if it isn't used in the final print."

Nicholson has intellectualized and experimented in other performances. He strives to imbue his characterizations with qualities that will prove realistic and believable to segments of his audience "who know that area."

"When I played J.J. Gittes in Chinatown, I wanted real detectives to believe him," Nicholson explained. "If they believed him then so would the rest of the audience.

"I spent a month and a half taking piano lessons to play Bobby Dupee in Five Easy Pieces. I wanted him to look at ease around a piano."

Non-stop all-news TV network on air

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — With Ted Turner — businessman, sportsman and now video-publisher — shouting "All Right!," the first non-stop all-news television network in the United States signed on Sunday.

At 6:05 p.m. EDT, after opening remarks by Turner and others and the playing of the U.S. national anthem, the Cable News Network report began with a story on Vernon Jordan, the civil rights leader who was shot and wounded in Fort Wayne, Ind., last week.

Thus began what one CNN executive, Robert Wussler, former president of CBS Television, called "a powerful force now and for the future of mankind, a living history on a 24-hour a day basis, 365 days a year."

Wussler is executive vice-president of CNN.

Tom Wheeler, president of the National Cable Television Association, speaking moments before CNN beamed its first signal by satellite to cable systems across the U.S., called the occasion "a tele-publishing event."

Wheeler added: Instead of 'All the news that's fit to print,' it will be, 'All the news all the time.'"

Fleecy fails to soften judge

TORONTO (CP) — The maker of Fleecy fabric softener was fined $25,000 Monday for making an unsubstantiated claim about the product in a television commercial.

County Court Judge Hugh Honsberger concluded the claim — that Fleecy provides "three times more softness than any other dryer product" — was not based on adequate and proper testing as required by law and convicted Bristol-Myers Canada Ltd. of contravening the federal Combines Investigation Act.

The company conducted tests that showed that Fleecy delivered more than three times the amount of chemical softener than provided by dryer-added softeners.

But Honsberger found that in the commercial, "the word 'softness' is being used in its sensory connotation" and "it does not refer to the quantity" of chemical softener.

He said that such a claim is unjustified because there is no test available to prove it and it amounts to deceiving the public.

Inflation index may go: PM

OTTAWA (CP) — Removing inflation-indexing in the income tax system is one money-raising measure the government is considering to reduce the deficit, Prime Minister Trudeau said Moday.

Trudeau was replying in the Commons to former finance minister John Crosbie who wanted to know whether "the end of income tax indexing looms as a probability, not a possibility."

Bob Rae, finance critic for the New Democratic Party, was first to question Trudeau on the issue but got vague answers from Pierre Bussieres, minister of state for finance.

He finally got an answer from Trudeau when he charged the Liberals were only concerned with stimulating the economy when they are in opposition.

"We are now budgeting for a considerable deficit," Trudeau replied. "We haven't designated it with a description of stimulative, but that's the effect."

Removing indexing, which began in 1974, would hit the taxpayer at all levels. The indexing system provides automatic adjustments to personal deductions, based on the inflation rate.

This year, a married taxpayer with two children and earning $15,000 would save $225 in income tax payments. A similar taxpayer earning $30,000 would save $475.

However, the budgetary deficit, estimated to reach a whopping $14.165 billion at the end of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1981, up from $11.4 billion on March 31, 1980, and $12.1 billion on March 31, 1979, means the government must look for ways to raise revenue.

Indexing has cost the government $8 billion in foregone revenues so far, $1.7 billion in 1979 alone.

Postal pact too lush: PC

OTTAWA (CP) — The new postal contract is one of the most extravagant ever signed by the government and will give postal workers a one-year wage increase of 26 per cent, Sinclair Stevens, Progressive Conservative treasury board critic, said Monday.

The former Tory treasury board president told the Commons miscellaneous estimates committee the contract will spark a new round of outrageous demands by unions in the public and private sectors.

Stevens led a two-hour attack by Conservative and New Democratic Party MPs on Treasury Board President Donald Johnston at a committee meeting Monday night, accusing him of stonewalling because he would not reveal terms of the contract.

Some plays go very much against the grain, but that is not a good reason for failing to make them when the occasion calls for it. Consider this deal where West leads a diamond to partner's ace and East returns the queen of diamonds.

Let's assume that South covers with the king, ruffed by West, and that a heart is returned. There is nothing South can now do to save the contract, and eventually he loses two more diamond tricks to go down one.

Yet the contract is cold as a mackerel if declarer, aware that the opening lead may be a singleton, takes steps to guard against that possibility. All he has to do is play low from his hand on the queen of diamonds!

True, this is an unnatural play to make, but it is the right thing to do because it guarantees the contract against everything except a volcanic eruption. There is a substantial danger that West may have a singleton diamond and four trumps, and the great advantage of ducking the diamond queen at trick two is obvious once declarer stops for a moment to think about it.

After the queen of diamonds wins, East cannot possibly harm declarer, even if he next plays the jack of diamonds — which South also ducks. West would now score a trump trick, but that would be the end of the line for the defense.

The virtue of ducking the queen of diamonds at trick two can be more readily appreciated if South realizes that he is looking at ten tricks at the point when East wins the opening diamond lead with the ace. All that declarer has to do is make sure that one of them — the king of diamonds — does not fly away at trick two. Ducking the queen of diamonds provides 100 per cent safety.

FOSTER FAMILY NEEDED
Good-looking, courteous "George" needs a long-term foster family in the Langford/Colwood area. Though 14 yers old, "George" looks and acts about 10. Because his development has been slow he attends a special class at the local school. A series of tragic circumstances have left him with much un-resolved grief. Wondering if anyone really loves and wants him, he is often over-anxious and eager to please. George needs a loving, caring foster family who will make a long-term commitment to him, where the Mom has lots of time to give him the love and structure he needs, where the Dad and kids will include him in family activities. If you think you can help, please call Resources and Placement Section, 598-5121, Ministry of Human Resources, Capital Region, or come to the "Course on Fostering," Wed., June 4, 7:30 p.m., 1627 Fort St.

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Art of thinning worth learning

Where vegetable and flower seeds have been sown thickly, the thinning-out of seedlings is a job for spare minutes. It involves the removal of a large number of plantlets so that those remaining have room for normal development.

This kind of work could be almost eliminated if we were not slaves to tradition. Our grandfathers had to sow seeds thickly because they saved their own seed and germination was doubtful.

Many changes have taken place since grandfather sowed his garden, changes we have failed to use to our benefit. We continue the old practices without question.

One of these changes is the standards for seed germination which must be met by every producer of seeds, and the germination percentage stamped on every seed packet. we now know, before any seeds are sown whether 60 per cent, 85 per cent or 99 per cent will germinate.

It is reasonable to surmise that the home gardener, armed with this advance information, would sow the seed at approximately the distance the plants need for proper growth, but this is seldom done.

We continue to put 12 to 25 seeds in one foot of row, then thin to the necessary six or eight inches, giving ourselves a lot of extra work and wasting more seed than we use.

In the home garden, seedling thinning is usually a hand job, but on small acreage it is done with a thinning hoe provided the seed was sown in rows and not broadcast.

Thinning hoes have blades of different widths which correspond to the spaces to be left between the plants. In the hands of an experienced operator the work is done quickly and neatly.

A substitute tool can be made by attaching a putty knife at a slight angle to the end of a broomstick. These knives are available in widths from one to three inches.

Hand thinning is as much an art as wielding a thinning hoe, for a careless worker can disturb the plants to a point where losses will be considerable.

The home gardener can well afford to do the job properly and carefully since it is part of his spare time hobby and it brings him close enough to his plants for him to see what they really look like and how they fare.

The art of hand thinning lies in removing the unwanted and leaving the wanted undisturbed.

Gentle pressure prevents the soil around this seedling from being disturbed and its roots loosened while the adjacent seedlings are being removed. Simple as the method is, it is difficult to train workers to do the job properly.

When the thinning is completed, the rows or beds are well watered to wash the soil close to those which remain and to firm the soil where others were removed.

When thinning carrots, remove the thinnings immediately to another part of the garden where the odor of the bruised foliage will attract the carrot rust fly. Never leave the thinnings near the carrot planting. Draw the soil towards the seedlings that are left, and keep the tops of the roots covered at all times.

Thinnings of leaf vegetables and some flowers can often be transplanted to another place in the garden. This is not true of all plants we grow from seed.

On the other hand, a lot of so-called "untransplantables" have been successfully moved while very small. This is another case of the home gardener accepting tradition without finding out for himself whether it is true or false.

Exchange reserves to $4.22B

OTTAWA (CP) — The government paid back in May $300 million U.S. of the $600 million it had borrowed on stand-by credit with the chartered banks to bolster the dollar, the finance department said today.

The government uses the U.S. money to buy Canadian dollars when demand for the dollar is low. That increases the value of the dollar.

In its monthly report on international reserves, expressed in U.S. dollars because they are the principal international currency used when Canada intervenes in the foreign exchange markets, the finance department said reserves had risen $249.7 million to $4.22 billion from April.

The increase resulted from the sale of 144,500 ounces of gold at an average price of $514.87 U.S., for a total of $74.4 million U.S., or $87.27 million Canadian.

As of May 30, gold holdings stood at 21.46 million ounces, down from 21.78 million ounces in December.

Lumber recovery forecast

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia will be under heavy pressure in the next decade to find enough merchantable timber to meet increased demands from the U.S., says Robert Sheehan, director of economic research for the U.S. National Association of Home Builders.

There will only be about one million housing starts in the U.S. this year but recovery should take place in the fourth quarter, Sheehan told a wood products seminar Monday.

By the end of 1981 he expects 1.6 million to 1.7 million housing starts, with the next decade averaging 1.8 million starts.

B.C. sells about 70 per cent of its lumber production to the U.S. Two million housing starts annually is considered to be a boom year.

Sheehan also said mortgage interest rates in the U.S. will average about 11½ per cent in the next decade, with medium house prices soaring above $170,000 and increasing about 7½ per cent a year.

Moderate growth should be experienced in the early 1980s "with a high rate of growth in the latter half," he said.

Other panelists at Monday's session analysed the ability of suppliers to meet the increased demand for forest products in the U.S.

Prices of timber and wood products have been increasing quicker than the rate of inflation, and demand for wood products will continue to outstrip supply in the foreseeable future, said John Wishart, vice-president of timber and timber lands for Georgia Pacific Corp.

"In addition, Canada — the source of most U.S. timber imports — will be less able to fulfil our demands than in the past," he said.

"Much of the Canadian timber inventory is relatively inaccessible. The same pressures that are reducing harvest opportunities in the U.S. are also occurring here in Canada and in 1985, B.C. may begin to phase its harvest down by as much as one third."

Mike Apsey, B.C. deputy forests minister, reiterated the province's five-year range and resource program, saying timber harvesting will be held at current levels until at least 1985.

While reasonable growth is expected for forest products in the 1980s, many industry observers have noted that the expansion of production may be constrained by supply, said Calvert Knudsen, president of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.

"The further reduction of commercial forest land, as a direct result of environmental pressures and withdrawals for other uses also poses a threat to the industry's ability to meet this challenge successfully," he said.

Secession poll in B.C. supported

VANCOUVER (CP) — About 81 per cent of Vancouver residents feel British Columbians should be allowed to hold a referendum to decide the province's future in confederation, similar to the recent Quebec referendum, says a survey conducted by the Western National Party.

The party, which promotes Western separatism, also said 65 per cent of those surveyed want Western Canada to have one official language, 73 per cent want Quebec to remain in Confederation and 35 per cent want a halt to immigration.

OPEN HOUSE

Proposed Substation Site and Transmission Line Route Location in the Saanich Peninsula Area

B.C. Hydro will hold an "open house" in Central Saanich for public information and discussion concerning a proposed Keating substation and a Pike Lake to Keating to Sidney area transmission line.

The expansion of Hydro facilities is necessary to serve growing electrical loads on the Saanich Peninsula. Transmission lines from Pike Lake to a new substation in the Keating Cross Road area will be needed by 1983. Additional transmission lines to the Sidney area will be required in the late 1980's or early 1990's.

Additional data and more detailed mapping, as well as a brief report for public distribution, will be available at the open house meeting. Detailed maps can be viewed and the report can be obtained in the municipal halls of Saanich, North Saanich, Central Saanich, the Capital Region District Office in Victoria and B.C. Hydro's regional office at 4400 W. Saanich Road, Victoria, B.C. any time after May 26, 1980.

OPEN HOUSE HOURS: 4 PM to 9 PM June 4, 1980
LOCATION: Stellys Secondary School Auditorium

Animals suffer volcano's toll

OLYMPIA, Wash. (UPI) — The state will lose more than 1.5 million wild animals and birds and more than 440,000 game fish as a result of eruptions of Mount St. Helens, state Game Director Ralph Larson said Monday.

Department officials estimated that the state economy will lose $102 million this year as a direct result of fish and wildlife losses. Losses beyond this year could bring the impact to more than $500 million before habitat destroyed by the volcano is restored, biologists said.

Biologists said animals lost in the blast, mud flows and ash fall include 5,250 elk, 6,000 deer, 200 bear, 100 mountain goats, 15 cougars, and thousands of smaller animals.

It was predicted that many thousand more fish, birds and animals will die from delayed effects of the ash fall. The toll of game animals and furbearers lost because of the eruption is expected to reach 67,000, not counting song birds, small mammals and other wildlife.

One concern is a large mortality of insects in ash fall areas. Insects are a major source of food for many kinds of fish and wildlife. Ash will affect forage for some big game animals and has killed hatchery fish by clogging their gills.

Reprisals for Hebron, callers say

TEL AVIV (AP) — Callers told Tel Aviv newspapers today that two underground Israeli terrorist groups were responsible for the bloody attacks against Palestinian nationalist leaders on the occupied West Bank. Arab merchants in the occupied zone began a general strike to protest the attacks.

The callers claimed to represent the Sons of Zion and the Anti-Terror Unit, two hitherto-unknown groups. In both cases, the callers said the bombings were in reprisal for a Palestinian guerrilla ambush last month that killed six Israelis in the West Bank city of Hebron.

One caller told the Haaretz newspaper that the Sons of Zion set off the explosions Monday that maimed two Palestinian nationalist mayors and injured seven other Arabs. The Maariv newspaper said its caller identified the bombers as members of the Anti-Terror Unit.

There were no reports of violence on the West Bank as the three-day protest strike got under way, but an Israeli army spokesman said soldiers forced some shopkeepers to open.

The Palestine Liberation Organization called for the strike in reply to a co-ordinated string of terrorist explosions Monday.

Accusing Israel of trying to "muzzle the free voice of the Palestinian people under occupation," the PLO vowed revenge for Monday's attacks in four West Bank cities and said it is seeking a UN Security Council session to take up "the explosive situation."

PLO chief Yasser Arafat blamed Israel and the United States for a campaign of "official terrorism against the Palestinians." However, Israel and the United States, as well as the United Nations, Egypt and the Soviet Union condemned the attacks on the West Bank of the Jordan River.

The bombings came at the end of the 30-day mourning period for six Israeli settlers killed by PLO terrorists in the West Bank city of Hebron, and were applauded by Yossi Dayan of the rightist Kach movement and the Jewish Defence League.

Dayan is deputy to Rabbi Meir Kahane, the American founder of the JDL.

Pacific isle secedes

VILA, New Hebrides (UPI) — Rebels who seized the South Pacific island of Espiritu Santo with an army of natives armed with bows and arrows and muskets declared independence today defying a threat of colonial "gunboat" intervention by Britain and France.

The radio announcement of independence of the new state of Vemarana by the secessionists, a group of plantation owners, came as France and Britain were discussing sending troops to quash the Rhodesia-type breakaway from the New Hebrides chain, about 1,000 miles northeast of Australia. The island was used as the model for the hit musical "South Pacific."

Officials in the colony's capital of Vila said 1,400 people have been evacuated from the island — the largest in the New Hebrides archipelago — by a flotilla of small boats and ships. Another 300 are still awaiting evacuation from Tangoa, a small island off the coast of Espiritu Santo, and the operation was expected to taper off later today, they said.

Latin America births booming

SANTIAGO (Reuter) — The population of Latin America will grow by almost two-thirds by the year 2000, says a United Nations study published in Santiago.

If current trends continue, the present population of 364 million will increase to 584 million, more than half of which will be Brazilian or Mexican.

The study, based on the official estimates of Latin American governments, also showed that life expectancy was rising throughout the region.

Latin Americans born between 1995 and 2000 should expect to live more than 60 years, except for Bolivians and Haitians, it said.

In 1955, only Argentina and Uruguay, the two most developed countries, could boast average life expectancy of more than 60 years. But now all Latin American countries except Peru, Bolivia, Nicaragua, Haiti and Honduras have reached that level, the study said.

The report said the average family size was also dropping, but more slowly. Twenty-five years ago, only Argentina and Uruguay had a rate of fewer than four children per mother.

Recession wallop greater than first expected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It now appears the recession slammed into the U.S. economy in early spring with more fury than was originally suspected.

According to late reports, new manufacturing orders fell in April more than they have in 5½ years, while construction spending registered yet another steep monthly decline, its third straight.

"The recession set in with a real wallop in April," said the Commerce Department's deputy chief economist William Cox.

The Commerce Department reports Monday bore him out.

New orders flowing to U.S. factories plunged 5.5 per cent or $8.3 billion to a seasonally adjusted $143.8 billion in April, reaching their lowest point in eight months.

It was the largest drop since a 6.8 per cent decline in December, 1974, when the United States was trapped in its last recession.

The decline in new factory orders had been anticipated, but the severity of the drop was far greater than originally evident.

Earlier this month in an advance report, the department said new orders for durable goods — those products designed to last more than three years — were off 4.2 per cent in April.

However, new data included in Monday's report revealed orders for durable goods were actually down 6.6 per cent or $5.1 billion to $72.5 billion.

The decline in durable goods orders was widespread, affecting virtually every manufacturing industry except aircraft makers.

The decline would have been almost twice as bad, the department noted, except that new orders for aircraft jumped 53 per cent in April.

Orders for steel, on the other hand, were off a hefty 20 per cent, while orders for non-electrical machinery were down 16.2 per cent.

For non-durable goods, orders declined 4.3 per cent or $3.2 billion to $71.3 billion — a disturbing sign because non-durables had been holding up relatively well.

In another report, the department said construction spending fell 3.6 per cent in April to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $221.7 billion — its lowest point in a year.

Shah trial urged

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Former U.S. Attorney-General Ramsey Clark offered today to take the place of any of the American hostages and condemned the abortive U.S. hostage reseue mission as "a lawless act."

But Ramsey said the danger of a U.S. intervention in Iran was greater if the Americans remained captive.

"It is imperative that the hostages be released now," Clark told delegates attending an "International Conference on U.S. Interventions in Iran." "It is so important to peace on earth that I offer today to take the place of any hostage if that will help resolve the tragic crisis."

Clark said the deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi should be tried and the wealth in his possession should be returned to Iran "if justice is to prevail."

"Is there to be a man above the law and how many greater crimes does history reflect than the crime of the shah of Iran against the peoples of Iran," Clark said in a speech on the second day of the conference being attend by nearly 300 delegates from 54 countries.

Clark, who was attorney-general in former president Lyndon Johnson's administration, also said an alleged letter from U.S. Gen. Robert Huyser about chances of a military takeover in Iran during the dying days of the ex-shah's regime, was an example of U.S. tampering with the rights of Iranians.

The letter was made public by Iranian authorities Monday as part of their argument that the U.S. has consistently interfered in Iranian affairs for the last 27 years.

Clark and nine other Americans, including Nobel Prize-winning biologist George Wald, have defied a U.S. justice department ban on travel to Iran by attending the conference. They could be sentenced in the U.S. to up to 10 years in prison and fined as much as $50,000, but Carter administration officials said the government had not yet decided whether to prosecute them.

The threatened penalties are part of an international economic emergency measure Carter used on May 18 to ban nearly all travel to Iran. Journalists were exempted from the order.

In addition to George Wald, Harvard professor emeritus and a winner of the 1967 Nobel Prize in biology, the other Americans at the conference are May Anderson, representing the American Friends Service Committee; Rev. John Walsh; Rev. Charles Kimball; Rev. Paul Washington; law professor Lennox Hind; freelance journalist John Derrase; lawyer Leonard Weinglass and Kay Camp, president of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICE

For the last 3 years, Eaton's has offered a men's sweater clearance in honor of Father's Day. And each year the price has gone up. Well, this year is an exception! We've given tradition a brand new twist — our selling price has actually gone down! But the quality is just as good as ever. And the selection is even better. In fact, this year we've made an extra special purchase of more than 11,000 sweaters from 3 major Canadian manufacturers.

There are turtlenecks, cardigans, crew and v-neck pullovers plus many more to choose from. And the majority are in all wool, with less than 25% of the selection in wool-acrylic blends. Not all stores have the same selection and the styles illustrated are not necessarily in all stores.

St. Helens threat to N-plant?

By BRYCE NELSON
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Because of the volcanic eruptions at Mount St. Helens, the government is re-evaluating the safety of the United States' largest nuclear power plant, which is located 53 kilometres southwest of the volcano.

"Did we do it right when we licensed the Trojan plant or should we take another look at it because of the volcano?" said C. M. Trammell, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's licensing project manager for the Trojan nuclear plant.

Trammell said in an interview he ordered the commission's geosciences division to conduct the re-evaluation of the plant two weeks ago, shortly after the May 18 eruption of the volcano. The plant is 64 km north of Portland on the Oregon side of the Columbia river.

So far, Trammell said, the commission has not found sufficient safety reasons — from the standpoint of volcanic activity — for the plant to remain closed after the last week in June. It is scheduled to reopen then after an 11-week shutdown for refuelling and safety modifications.

The plant was closed April 9, more than six weeks before the volcanic eruption.

People at the Trojan site felt nothing during the earthquakes or eruption at Mount St. Helens, according to Donald Broehl, assistant vice president for generation, engineering and construction for the Portland General Electrice Co., operator of the 1130 megawatt, pressurized water reactor facility.

Broehl, expecting that the plant would reopen on schedule, said: "I don't think that mountain is capable of doing anything to hurt our plant."

Both Trammell of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and Lynn Frank, director of Oregon's Department of Energy, said in interviews Monday that the utility must demonstrate satisfactory strengthening of its structures at the plant to resist seismic (earthquake) shock before their agencies will permit the plant to reopen.

Both said that strengthening had been called for before the volcano erupted, and had nothing to do with the volcanic activity.

"We're going to review these modifications very carefully," Frank said.

Toronto rock fans riot

TORONTO (CP) — About 1,000 angry rock fans battled 75 Toronto and Ontario Provincial police for almost four hours Monday night outside Ontario Place after they were refused admission to a sold-out concert.

OPP Inspector Harry Campbell said the gates to the concert were closed at 7:30 p.m.by the rock group, Teenage Head, and singer Bob Segarini because there were already too many people inside Ontario Place's open-air auditorium for safety.

To prevent the crowd of those denied admission from getting to the auditorium, officials at the lakefront recreation park raised a drawbridge to isolate the area, which is surrounded by a moat.

When the crowd continued to try to gain admission, the scene turned ugly. Nearby Lakeshore Boulevard was closed and additional police were called in from far away as Whitby and Burlington.

Three hours after the melee began, there had been nine arrests and three OPP officers were treated for injuries at hospital.

A woman was treated at hospital for injuries, and at least four others were hurt in the crush of fans who tried to jump over the gates and swim the moat.

Toronto police on horseback moved in to defend the central gates from the chanting crowd. The mounted policemen pushed the crowd through a hail of beer bottles, stones and firecrackers.

Several times the crowd, chanting "fight, fight, fight," charged back, but the police held.

Baseball fans leaving nearby CNE stadium around 10 p.m. after a game between Toronto Blue Jays and California Angels were prevented by police from going to their cars in the Ontario Place parking lot.

Link study awarded

By JAKE BANKY

Willis, Cunliffe, Tait Co. Ltd., senior firm of a Victoria-based consortium which has already presented the government with a proposal for a floating bridge link, has been hired to do the basic design and cost analysis for the project.

The project is part of the government's $100,000 pre-feasibility study into a permanent transportation link across Georgia Strait.

"They will compile information on the safety and the cost of a floating bridge structure that will either have an underwater or above-water link for shipping," Science Minister Pat McGeer announced today.

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber said today McGeer has put the firm in an awkward position.

"They are being asked — in part — to evaluate their own concept. This is bad policy and establishes a bad precedent. McGeer should reconsider," Barber said.

On April 15, the minister met with a delegation from the consortium headed by Joe Cunliffe.

McGeer now says the government is hoping the company will be able to come up with cost figures that will be within 10 per cent of the actual cost.

Tom Pelton, head engineer for Willis, Cunliffee, Tait, said the study should be finished by June 16.

All work on the pre-feasibility studies is expected to be finished by June 30.

The route under consideration is the most southerly proposed, crossing about 16 kilometres of open water from Tsawwassen to Galiano Island.

Ferry halts rouse the Never Agains

By AL FORREST

The Victoria vigilantes group known as the Never Again committee may be back in business following the announcement B.C. Ferry workers will walk off the job on three days this month.

The walkout is part of a province-wide protest by the B.C. Government Employees' Union over the proposal to limit indexing of pension plans.

The Victoria-based semi-secret group was formed in 1978 following a wildcat strike and declared there should never again be a disruption in the ferry lifeline between Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland.

They pursued the idea of a lawsuit against the ferry union to collect damages for harm caused the Victoria economy.

All their meetings were private and they issued few statements.

They eventually shelved the lawsuit.

On Monday Transportation Minister Alex Fraser indicated he likely will not intervene in the three walkouts this month because they will be brief.

But later three former members of the Never Again committee said Victoria can not afford to stand idly by let the ferry union damage Victoria's economy.

"The ferry service is a lifeline for us," said Ken King, past president of the Visitors Information Centre, and a key member of the 1978 Never Again committee.

"We must get action from the minister. We must get the support of the whole community. We must get the united help of all Vancouver Island MLAs because this affects us all."

King said the community may consider the idea of a lawsuit again if there is a lengthy strike.

But John Ansell, who was chamber president in 1978 and who participated in some discussions with the Never Again committee, said the lawsuit idea does not seem appropriate.

"What we should concentrate on is getting the declaration of an essential service. It is damaging to the Victoria economy to have even a hint of a ferry strike."

Ansell said the fact the walkouts will last only about four hours on June 6, 10 and 16 is not the central issue.

"Once the talk about ferry strikes begins, people fear they will get stranded and they stay away from the Island. These three walkouts will be very costly."

Former B.C. Hotels president Frank Burger, now retired, was co-ordinator of the Never Again committee in 1978.

"We have done all the research on a possible lawsuit if anyone wants to make use of the information. It is all ready to go if it proves necessary.

"The damage is immense but it is difficult to deal with this sort of strike."

Doctor Spock flails grades

MONTREAL (CP) — North American schools should stop failing students because grades are worthless measures of a child's educational ability, baby doctor Benjamin Spock says.

"Adults who don't trust children . . . think everyone has to be coerced into doing their jobs," Spock told about 1,000 school trustees, teachers and school administrators Monday."Grades are an abomination. They mislead the parents and the child."

Spock told the Third Congress on Education, sponsored by the Canadian School Trustees' Association, that parents and teachers should encourage children who get a C grade, not scold them.

"Studies have shown that if you hold back a Grade 3 child he wouldn't do Grade 3 any better the next year because he'd be depressed and ashamed.

"But . . . those who have been encouraged to go forward will do better one or two years ahead."

Spock, author of the famous book, Baby and Child Care, noted that teachers of both former British prime minister Winston Churchill and evolutionist Charles Darwin said they were hopeless at school and would become insignificant adults.

Research indicates that if his or her teacher gets the impression a child is not a good learner, "that concept will turn out."

Job-creation plans unveiled

OTTAWA (CP) — Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy announced a wide-ranging package of job-creation measures Monday that he called an important beginning solution to problems faced by natives, women, young people and other groups experiencing high unemployment.

The new program, with a budget of about $137 million this fiscal year, is expected to generate more than 25,000 new jobs or training opportunities for those "who are continually frustrated in their yearning to participate fully in the economic life of Canada."

"Native people, even in the province of Alberta, face unemployment rates of approximately 75 per cent, and this situation is even more critical for native women," Axworthy told the Commons.

The program is also aimed at handicapped persons, who face "invisible barriers of prejudice and ignorance" and women who, after working tirelessly in the homes to raise families "are told they are not wanted in the paid labor force," he said.

Opposition spokesmen described the government's proposals as scandalously inadequate.

Fire alarm funding goes up in smoke

The provincial government spent $200,000 in lottery funds on smoke alarms for private nursing homes throughout B.C. but they don't meet the national building code standards for fire safety.

Victoria Fire Chief Eric Simmons made the disclosure today before a city council committee.

A year ago, then-Attorney-General Garde Gardom announced the smoke alarm giveaway for all intermediate and personal care facilities licensed by the provincial health ministry.

About 9,000 detectors were distributed.

"It's a certainty they don't meet the national building code," Simmons told the fire prevention committee of council.

The Victoria fire department has been using the national code standards in its inspections of city nursing homes, which started earlier this year.

The code specifices hard-wired smoke detectors, different from the battery-operated smoke alarms in that they work on a conventional AC power supply and trigger an alarm audible throughout the building, instead of alerting only the occupants of a particular bedroom.

(For other nursing home story, see Page 13.)

Highways scoops McGeer's dish

Communications Minister Pat McGeer — who touts earth station satellite receivers as a new era in electronic communications — has been scooped by a branch of his own government.

The receivers — McGeer had one erected Monday behind the B.C. legislative building as a demonstration project — have been used for six months at four remote highways ministry camps in northern B.C.

And highways ministry officials say the federal department of communications told them they didn't need licences — the same point McGeer was trying to make Monday while being interviewed beside the large dish-shaped receiver.

"The receiver is just a sophisticated antenna, and you don't need a licence for an antenna," said McGeer, who has applied for a licence as a formality.

That is the exact point the federal department made last fall when it allowed the highways ministry to set up its receivers, said highways ministry spokesman Jess Ketchum.

"We've already got these things," Highways Minister Alex Fraser said in an interview Monday. "McGeer's six months late."

Fraser, who sits beside McGeer in the legislature, said he's never talked to the communications minister about the receivers at the highways camps.

"It's the only recreational facilities they have in some of those camps."

Meanwhile, says McGeer, federal Communications Minister Francis Fox showed vision and courage when he changed his mind about a crackdown on non-commercial operators of satellite antennas.

The provincial minister of communications said Fox has come around to seeing things his way.

Fox now says the government has no business trying to control a private citizen's use of a satellite antenna.

"If he follows through we are going to have a totally new era in Canada with respect to industry, entertainment, culture and most of all — from my point of view — with respect to education.

The big dish beside the legislature is being rented at $1,000 a week, which is far too rich for the average person, McGeer said.

A smaller dish — about 1.2 metres in diameter — could be sold for $500 or $600 if mass produced, he said.

John Howard . . . back from the brink

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Five years ago the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island was on the verge of collapse.

Today it is prospering as never before in its 45-year history, helping prison inmates and their families.

The society has never been in better financial shape. This year's budget of a quarter million dollars is 2½ times the size of 1975. Staff over the same period has gone from three to 15. And the number of volunteers has swollen from 70 in 1978 to 111.

How has it all come about?

"We've changed with the times," says Willie Blonde, the society's executive-director.

Prior to 1975, he says, the traditional image of the society was one of individual casework approach. The emphasis was on counselling offenders whether in jail or on parole.

But then the government corrections agencies began to take over much of that work and the society found itself nearly out of business.

It reached a nadir in 1975 when the society was reduced to little more than a telephone answering and referral service.

Blonde joined the organization that fall.

His first task, he says, was to look for other things the society could do.

The mandate was clear — get the community more involved; develop new programs.

While members steadfastly agreed that services to prisoners should remain the principal aim, they set their sights on two other objectives.

One was to develop alternatives to prison.

The other was to act as a watchdog over the justice system to urge reforms and promote greater public awareness of prisoners' needs.

The measure of their success lies in the nine programs the society now has in operation in Victoria, Nanaimo and Campbell River.

The programs are varied. They include a Neighborhood Accountability Board which was set up last year in Nanaimo to provide juveniles with an alternative to the court process.

Board members, all volunteers, review cases and work out arrangements for restitution, community work and rehabiliation.

Blonde says the board has handled 65 cases to date of which 56 have been successfully completed.

Also in Nanaimo the society is supervising a fine option program, the first of its kind in the province.

Persons who can't afford to pay fines are given an opportunity to pay their debts through community work projects.

Last year, too, the society took over supervision of community work services in the Campbell River area at the request the B.C. corrections branch and launched an Island-wide Job Search program for persons leaving jail. Since October jobs have been found for 43 ex-inmates out of a caseload of 128.

Blonde says it is ironical the evolution of a more community-based approach has come about during a time when hard-line conservatism is on the upswing.

He sees the red-neck attitudes emerging whether he's talking to a service club group or high school class.

"The only way to counter the conservatism is know what you believe and basically preach it.

"If you start talking to them about their involvement, if you show them some of the facts about costs and what jails do to people, it's surprising how many are accepting of new approaches."

The annual cost to keep a person behind bars is running between $20,000 and $25,000. New prison construction costs $110,000 a bed.

Blonde says 75 per cent of those in prison are there as a result of non-violent crimes.

"There's obviously a need to lock up violent offenders. But there has to be other ways to deal with non-violent offenders.

"You only have to look at the effect a jail has on a person. It doesn't rehabilitate him. It doesn't provide a deterrent to others.

"The only thing jail does is punish, which is okay. If we do wrong we got to expect to pay.

"But at what cost to the individual and to his family?

TOWN TALK

The movie's called Soft is the Heart of a Child and senior aides to Energy Minister Bob McClelland winced visibly when the minister suggested they join him in a screening preview.

McClelland, when he held the health ministry portfolio, was outspoken on the problems and evils of overconsumption of alcohol and that's what the film's about. It's a dramatic portrayal of alcohol's devastation of a family.

An aide, who shall remain nameless, said the film — the work of the San Diego-based Ray Kroc Foundation — is probably the most moving film of its kind ever made.

You can see it this Friday free of charge at the Newcombe Auditorium at 12.15 p.m.

Like many Gulf Islanders, Yvette Valcourt is incensed about the transit levy that's turned up on her Hydro bill and she's let it be known she's not going to pay it.

So no one was surprised Saturday to see the tireless Salt Spring rep to the Capital Regional District circulating a petition at the Ganges farmers' market calling on government to put a stop to the nonsense.

The surprise came Sunday morning after Mass at Our Lady of Grace Roman Catholic Church.

Aldermen hold back on rest home safety

City council's fire prevention committee today delayed any action on fire safety upgrading ordered for a Victoria rest home for fear it could force it to close and turn out 30 elderly and handicapped patients.

Aldermen also learned that another 500 residents in about 30 more city nursing homes may be similarly affected by orders from the Victoria fire department.

The owners of Grant Place, 998 Humboldt, appealed to council the March 18 order from the department demanding they make improvements in 14 areas to bring the building up to the standards of the national building code.

The fire department found after inspecting the 80-year-old former private home the following violations of the building code relating to fire safety: exits and entrances, secondary means of egress, fire separation and resistance in stairways and halls, illuminated markings and signs and emergency lighting.

Lawrence Hitchmough said he was willing to make some of the improvements but if he was ordered to do them all at once it would cost $40,000 to $50,000, eliminate a number of beds and cost him $12,000 to $24,000 a year income.

As all his patients are subsidized by the provincial government at the standard fee, Hitchmough said he cannot raise his rates to cover the extra costs as a home with private patients could.

He also pointed out that the fire department came round six months ago and gave Grant Place a clean bill of health.

Fire Chief Eric Simmons said this was true, but that was before the department had got around to extending its upgrading program to nursing homes.

Ald. Ken Sinclair said Grant Place was just the tip of the iceberg and how city council handled the appeal would establish an important precedent affecting the health and safety of many elderly residents of Victoria.

Fire department inspector Gordon Ferris told the committee about 30 other city nursing homes face similar fire upgrading orders, which house on average 12 to 15 patients each.

Mayor Bill Tindall noted that council had given relief to owners of apartments who last year were the target of fire upgrading orders, but nursing homes were different as the patients were usually elderly and infirm.

He said council should uphold the fire chief's order on Grant Place.

But a compromise suggested by committee chairman Ald. Bob Wright was passed.

The committee deferred the matter for two weeks while Hitchmough huddles with the fire department to determine which improvements he is willing to make now.

City manager Jim Bramley was also instructed to write to the provincial government pointing out the financial hardship one department of government — the fire marshal in the A-G's ministry — is creating for nursing home owners subsidized by another government department, the health ministry.

Members of the Retail Clerks Union continue to picket Woodward's in Victoria and Port Alberni today with conflicting reports on what effect the action is having.

Union spokesman Bryan Denton said today 80 per cent of the company's business has dropped off in Port Alberni as a result of the picketing which began Monday morning.

But the company said it is business a usual both there and in Victoria.

The view of the strike's effects was not the only area of disagreement as the parties differ on a number of items related to issues in dispute.

The Retail Clerks Union, Local 1518, was certified last October to represent the food store employees at Woodward's Victoria store in the Mayfair mall. Efforts to reach an agreement on a first contract broke down about three weeks ago.

There are about 145 employees involved, the majority of them part-time.

The major issue is not wages but pensions, union security and other benefits such as an in-store, 15-percent discount, length of coffee breaks and a company profit sharing plan.

Denton said the employees had agreed at the bargaining table to take less in wages than they would have been given had they not joined the union in order to win some of the other benefits.

The part-timers agreed to accept $17 less a week, he said.

The company's profit sharing plan was not an issue when the talks broke off, he said, as the union had withdrawn its demand that the employees continue to have that benefit.

The employees already have the store discount and the longer coffee break so the union's demands would not have cost the company an awful lot more than they are paying now, Denton said.

Brown said the union never agreed at the bargaining table to accept reduced wages nor did it ever state that it was backing off on the profit-sharing plan.

Thief flees room panting

Police said the startled burglar grabbed the man's pants and fled out the door.

The burglar not only got away — the pants contained the man's wallet and $150.

The incident occurred about 5:30 a.m.

Police believe the same thief may have been responsible for break-ins reported about two hours earlier at another apartment at 845 Burdett a few blocks away.

But the thief goofed. Police said he missed the wad of bills.

Officers later learned another suite had been entered and $140 stolen from a wallet in a man's pants.

Three other suites may also have been entered. Keys, stolen from the apartment maintenance room, were in the locks when officers arrived at the scene.

BATvan returns

BATvan is back looking for drinking drivers.

The unit, manned by six officers, was in Colwood and Langford Monday night when 400 cars were stopped.

Officers charged one person with impaired driving, imposed a 24-hour roadside suspension on another and issued traffic offence warnings to 25 others.
